TWELVE DIE IN FIRE CAUSED BY BOY'S CARELESSNESS

Two Others Probably Buried in Ruins of Chicago Furniture Store.

BENZINE STARTS BLAZE

Victims Trapped on Top Floors of Six-Story Building Rescue Work Delayed.

CHICAGO, March 25.—Twelve lives are known to have been lost in a fire in the L. Fish Furniture company building at 1906-1908 Wabash avenue here today, and two women who are missing are believed to have perished. About 40 employes escaped. A girl who jumped from a third story window died in a hospital. Ladders were raised to the sixth floor, the topmost one, in an effort to rescue anyone who might be alive. The fire is said to have started from an explosion of benzine in the repair rooms on the fourth floor.

Following is a list of identified dead:

DARLINGTON, HARRY, aged 40; painter.

ANDERSON, Ethel, age 18; stenographer.

BELL, MINER W.; advertising manager.

BRUNKE, ROSIE, aged 17, stenographer.

BURDEN, MRS. HANNAH, aged 30, widow; forewoman folding department.

SULLIVAN, LILLIAN, age 16; folder.

GREEN, WILLIAM, age 24; clerk.

LICHTENSTEIN, ETHEL, age 18; stenographer.

MITCHELL, HARRY M., auditor of company, member of firm; brother-in-law of Simon Fish.

M'GRATH, V., age 18; stenographer.

QUINN, GERTRUDE, age 20; folder.

The missing:

Warge, Mary, age 20; folder.

St. Clair, Bert, age 25; confidential clerk.

The search of the wreckage was abandoned for the day after Chief Building Inspector Short decided that three of the walls were in dangerous condition. If these are still standing in the morning, the work of removing debris will be resumed.

A coroner's jury impaneled today viewed the bodies at the morgue but the inquest was postponed until April 2.

Fire Caused by Carelessness.

Lee Stoeckel, a clerk of the Fish company, who is said to have started the fire, told his story to Attorney Frank Hogan this afternoon. Stoeckel, who is only 20 years old, is admittedly more unfortunate than culpable. Attorney Hogan says he will bring some charge against the young man to insure his attendance at the inquest. Stoeckel was brought before the fire attorney, with his hand, which had been burned, swathed in bandages. He appeared heartbroken and told his story with difficulty.

"About 8:45 o'clock this morning," Stoeckel said, "Mr. Mitchell, who is a member of the firm, gave me three pocket cigar lighters and told me to go to the fourth floor and fill them with benzine. I had filled two of the lighters out of the five-gallon can and was working on the third when there was an explosion.

"A sheet of flame almost blinded me. I did not fully regain my senses until I had reached the street. The lighters contained a contrivance to make a spark, but whether I ignited one of them I don't know. I either dropped the can of benzine when the flame shot up in front of me or it was blown out of my hands."

No Means of Rescue at Hand.

The financial loss is placed at $300,000, equally divided between building and stock. The Fish Furniture company occupied two buildings, separated by an alley, one building fronting on Wabash avenue, where the fire occured, and the other on State street, which is a block west of Wabash avenue. Those in the State street store, looking across the alley could see girls on the fifth and sixth stories of the burning structure, rushing back and forth to the windows screaming for

DENIES GUGGENHEIMS 'PRACTICALLY OWN' ALASKA

Syndicate's Managing Director Sharply Questioned in Ballinger Inquiry.

$15,000,000 IS INVESTED

No Returns Yet but They "Have Hopes" Testimony Regarding Cunningham Claims.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—The Ballinger-Pinchot inquiry was resumed today after an adjournment of practically two weeks.

As soon as the committee met this morning, Attorney Brandeis, representing L. R. Glavis and others, sprung a surprise by requesting that Secretary Ballinger be called as one of the witnesses. Mr. Brandeis said at first that he wished to identify by Mr. Ballinger two letters he desired to introduce in evidence at this time. Questioned further by members of the committee as to his intent, he admitted that he desired to conduct a general examination of the accused cabinet official.

Counsel for Mr. Ballinger objected to this and called forth from Mr. Brandeis the remark that from his letters he had always supposed Mr. Ballinger to be ready to appear whenever and as often as any one connected with the inquiry desired.

Some members of the committee seemed to think that Mr. Ballinger, as the person most interested in the inquiry should have opportunity to make his statement first in his own way and not subject himself to a cross-examination before being examined in chief. The matter was passed over, to be decided later in executive session.

Birch on Stand All Day.

The witness stand was occupied during the entire day by Stephen Birch, managing director of the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate in Alaska. It was thought at first that Mr. Birch's testimony would be largely perfunctory and would follow the lines of his recent statement before the Senate committee on territories. Members of the committee, however, became deeply interested in the operations of the Alaska syndicate and they plied the witness with questions from every possible angle. Much of the questioning was intended to show that the Guggenheims practically control Alaska. Mr. Birch stoutly denied this.

"Well," he was asked by Representative Graham, "if the Guggenheims got control of the coal lands in Alaska what would there be left?"

Mr. Birch said he did not think this was a fair question to ask him. He admitted that the Guggenheim interests were large, that they had invested some $15,000,000 and had contracted for the expenditure of other millions. There had been no returns from these investments as yet. But the syndicate "had hopes."

Cunningham Option Voided.

As to the Cunningham claims, Mr. Birch produced the option that a committee of the claimants had given to Daniel Guggenheim July 20, 1907. He declared this option had been accepted by the Guggenheims December 4 of that year. The claimants, however, had never lived up to its terms. Cunningham, he said, in January or February, 1908, had contended that the Guggenheims themselves had voided the option by changing their railroad base from Katalla to Cordova and that furthermore the option was of no effect because a majority of the claimants had never ratified it.

Mr. Brandeis sought to show that the Morgans and Guggenheims, with their "great power and influence in this country," must have brought pressure to bear during the last two years in an effort to get patents granted the Cunningham claimants. Mr. Birch declared, however, that he knew of no such efforts.

"What could we have done?" he protested.

"Ah, Mr. Birch, you can answer that

CITY MAY GET BIG NATIONAL CONVENTION

AFTER SESSION EMPLOYED OFFICERS Y. M. C. A.

Meeting, to Last One Week, Take Place in June Secretary Hall Talks.

It is probable that the next annual national conference of employed officers of the Young Men's Christian association, which is to take place this June, will be held in Colorado Springs. No meeting place was decided upon at the last conference, which was held a year ago in Omaha, the matter being left to a committee to decide.

Secretary C. B. Hall of the local Y. M. C. A. yesterday received a communication from Martin L. Foss, physical director of the Bedford branch of the Brooklyn association, asking for data concerning this city. The naming of the meeting place will practically rest with Mr. Foss, and Mr. Hall has asked Secretary A. W. Henderson of the local Chamber of Commerce to furnish him with the desired information.

If the convention is secured, it will mean much for Colorado Springs. The June conference will be attended by between 500 and 800 delegates, and although the exact dates of the convention have not been announced, the meeting will last for a week.

"Two years ago I made an effort to secure the annual convention of the employed officers for Colorado Springs," said Mr. Hall yesterday, "but the town was too far west to suit most of the delegates.

"This year, however, I understand, the intention is to select as a meeting place some small city where there are attractions such as we have in and about Colorado Springs, and some of the opposition to coming west has been withdrawn. Colorado Springs is being strongly urged by many of those who will be the leading delegates, and I have strong hopes of seeing the convention come here.

MURDER NOT INTENDED

John Mott Found Guilty of Involuntary Manslaughter for Killing of Ernest Steller.

CRIPPLE CREEK, March 25.—John Mott, accused of the murder of Karl Steller, was tonight found guilty of involuntary manslaughter. This crime is punishable by one year or less in the county jail. Judge Sheafor granted the defendant 10 days in which to file an appeal.

A feature of the case was the tactics used by Attorney E. J. Boughton for the defense in illustrating the nature of the wound by which Steller came to his death. Walking to the jury rail he took a large rubber ball filled with water which he proceeded to stab with a knife, to the dismay of the jurors, who were covered with water. After apologizing to them he announced that this was a peculiar demonstration of the nature of the wound.

The jury reached a verdict after five hours' deliberation.

CANON ORDINANCE SENT TO PRINTER

Council Unanimously Passes Measure Fixing Election Date for May 24.

Every member of the City Council yesterday voted in favor of an ordinance calling a special election for Tuesday, May 24, to vote on the proposed issue of $220,000 in bonds for the purchase of South Cheyenne canon by the city, and the ordinance was accordingly ordered printed.

This election will decide whether the bonds, bearing 5 per cent interest and maturing in 20 years, shall be issued and the canon purchased for $217,500. The councilmen all appeared heartily in favor of the project, and there was none of the opposition intimated in unfounded published reports.

In reply to a query by Commissioner Higinbaugh, City Attorney McKesson announced that the canon, if purchased by the city, will be under the control of the park commission. The property will pay for itself, according to the plan outlined whereby the commission will charge an admission fee, as is done by the present owners, in this way the interest on the bonds will be taken care of annually, and the surplus revenue can go toward redemption of the bonds.

The ordinance in full, as passed on first reading yesterday, is printed on page 14 of this issue.

It is understood that the street car company will not grant the request of the Council, as voiced in a resolution submitted by Commissioner Whitaker, that the 5-cent fare limit on Colorado avenue be extended from Adams crossing to Buena Vista avenue, a distance of about half a mile. The park commission wanted the limit extended so that visitors to the Garden of the Gods could have easier access on a 5-cent fare.

Commissioner Lawton yesterday introduced an ordinance covering rules and specifications to be observed in the future construction of pavements, curbs and gutters, in which was embodied the city's cement specification. The ordinance is to take the place of the one passed in 1907 and calls for a better grade of walks and curbs. It was ordered sent to the printer.

Another ordinance introduced and placed upon its passage provides that outside of the paving and parking districts property owners are not allowed to extend their curb line unless all of the residents in that particular block and on the same side of the street do the same.

Permission was given W. T. Ross to remove three trees from his yard, at 117 North Chestnut street.

ENGINEER HIBBARD KILLED

Two Other Men Hurt When Automobile Plunges Over Embankment on Narrow Road.

FORT COLLINS, Colo., March 25.—Wellington Hibbard, general manager of the Laramie-Poudre Reservoir and Irrigation company, was killed in an automobile accident, 48 miles from here today at noon. The automobile plunged over an embankment. A. I. Akin, a civil engineer, suffered a broken leg, and the chauffeur's arm was broken. The accident occurred on Pingree hill, on which the road is narrow and dangerous.

ROOSEVELT VISITS EGYPTIAN TOMBS

MANIFESTS EAGERNESS TO OBTAIN INFORMATION.

Shows Keen Perception in Examining Paintings. His Doings and Sayings Stir All Cairo.

CAIRO, Egypt, March 25.—Up with the sun today, after a restful night at the Mena house, Colonel Roosevelt and his party were early astir in preparing for a visit to the Necropolis of Sakkara, where are the wonderful tombs of various kings and of the Apis bulls.

Part of last night was spent in viewing the Sphinx by moonlight, and Colonel Roosevelt said today that the weird sight had been thoroughly enjoyed by him self and his family. It was the most interesting thing he had seen in his trip.

Tonight Colonel Roosevelt and his family returned to Cairo, dined with the American consul general, Mr. Iddings, and later attended a banquet tendered him by Sir Eldan Gorst, British agent and consul general in Egypt.

Major F. K. Watson, pacha, aide de camp to the khedive, who met Colonel Roosevelt a year ago at Port Said, was an early caller at the Mena house today. He paid the respects of the khedive to the American huntsman and tendered to him the use of the khedive's special camel corps for the eight miles ride across the desert of Sakkara. Such a tender always is a special mark of favor and Colonel Roosevelt accepted it with pleasure. The colonel and Kermit each rode one of the animals over the dreary waste to the Necropolis, but Mrs. Roosevelt and Ethel, chose a more comfortable sand cart.

Inspects the Tombs.

Arriving at the tombs of the bulls of Apis, the oldest of which dates back to 1500 B. C., the sightseers were met by an archaeologist who had been instructed to act as their guide. With lighted candles the Americans entered the dark caverns and looked with interest upon the huge sarcophagi. Colonel Roosevelt evinced great curiosity in the methods used by the ancient

STRIKE FAILS OF RESULT

Members of Philadelphia Unions Preparing to Resume Work Monday.

PHILADELPHIA, March 25.—Anticipating that the Central Labor union at its meeting on Sunday will officially call off the sympathetic strike which has been in effect for three weeks, union workers in most of the trades still affected by the general strike today arranged to resume work Monday.

At the offices of the Philadelphia National Baseball league club it was stated the iron workers will resume operations on the grandstand and bleachers and it is hoped to have the work completed before the season opens.

The committee of ten in a statement says that as a result of the general strike more than 15,000 new members have been enrolled in local unions

NET IS THROWN OUT TO CATCH BRIBE GIVERS

Grand Jury Demands Information From Directors of Pittsburg Banks.

31 OFFICIALS INDICTED

Inside History of Municipal Corruption Contained in Presentments to the Court.

PITTSBURG, March 25.—Exposure of appalling details of Pittsburg's civic unrighteousness, indictments against 31 present and past councilmen and a demand upon directors of the city depositories to investigate their own books and ascertain the bribe givers in connection with the ordinance designating their institutions as city depositories were features of two presentments made by the grand jury today.

The presentments make a sensational story of the inside history of corruption in municipal bodies in 1905, and the demand on the banks indicates that even more sensational developments are expected on Monday when the bank directors, complying with the demand of the grand jury, make their reports.

A further result of the presentments was the order of City Controller Morrow late today for the withdrawal of all city funds from the six banks, and the practical nullification of the ordinance designating them as custodians of city funds.

About $3,640,320 of city funds is in these banks and this would be increased many millions next week by tax payments. According to the controller withdrawal will be gradual, however, in order that the institutions be not embarrassed or any undue alarm caused depositors.

Plot to Obtain Bribes.

The presentments give full details of the plot on the part of the councilmen to obtain bribes from the six banks, and the means adopted for paying bribes are related.

The story of the transfer of $4,000 by an unnamed man to former Councilman Charles Stewart in the Hotel Imperial, New York, issued today, related that Max C. Leslie, former chairman of the Republican county committee, received $25,000 by arrangement between E. H. Jennings and F. A. Griffen of the Columbia National bank, and that Leslie gave William Brand, then president of the common council, directly or indirectly, $17,500 to obtain the city deposits for the Columbia National bank.

An unnamed man is said to be interested and concerned in the payment of the money by Leslie to Brand, either as intermediary or as principal. It is declared that Morris Einstein received $15,000 from the Workingman Savings and Trust company to have that bank named as a city depositary, but the name of the bank official who paid him the money is unknown.

Bank Book Mutilated.

It is further declared in the presentments that members of the grand jury are of the opinion that the books of the Workingman bank have been mutilated, three pages referring to this deal having been cut from the ledger. Einstein, it is also declared, kept $5,000 for his services in arranging the deal.

Further declarations in the presentments are that two city clerks were given $1,000 each, and that $1,750 was set apart for newspaper men, and that Henry M. Bolger, the saloonkeeper already convicted of bribery, was given $500 for his services in bringing about the meeting between officials of the German National bank of Pittsburg and the councilmen.

The public is urged not to pass hasty judgment on any officials of the banks and stress is laid on the solvency of the institutions.

It is recited that John F. Klein and Joseph Wasson, by reason of their confessions and statements making possible the exposure are entitled to great consideration and a reduction of Klein's sentence is urged.

It is also recommended that no fu-

ETNA POURING LAVA FROM FOURTEEN OPENINGS

Caravans of Peasants Flee From Their Homes on Mountain Slope.

SITUATION VERY GRAVE

Flow Passes Around Two Villages Thousands Watching Progress of the Eruption.

CATANIA, Sicily, March 25.—Etna still is angry. From the top of the old crater, volumes of white smoke are issuing tonight, while from the new craters that have formed lava is pouring, and large incandescent masses are exploding with loud detonations and clouds of black smoke.

From Catania and from the villages surrounding Etna thousands of persons are watching the progress of the eruption.

Streams of lava already have surpassed in volume those of the eruption of 1892, but changing their courses as they reached Belpasso and Nicolosi they have followed the slopes of hills around these towns which have thus far escaped destruction. The people are still fearful but in both villages soldiers are encamped in the squares to avert a panic while the mayor and parish priests are ministering to the needy.

Cardinal Francesco Natale, who returned today to the scene of the eruption, promised to bring back to the people of Nicolosi and Belpasso the veil of St. Agatha, which they believe has the power to stop the advancing lava.

Professor Ricco, director of the observatory on the Volcano, despite a narrow escape from death today, has returned to the lava fields. To those who advised prudence he replied: "My post is there."

Frank A. Perret of Brooklyn, N. Y., who is attached to the Royal observatory on Mount Vesuvius, arrived here today and went immediately to the scene of the eruption.

Fourteen Craters Active.

It is now known that there are 14 openings from which lava is issuing. The heat from the currents is so intense it is impossible to approach within 300 feet of the streams. The flow of lava down the mountainside now averages 15 feet every seven minutes.

Late tonight it was considered probable that the streams would pass between Borrello and Nicolosi without touching them.

The people are pleading for assistance, especially for carts in which to remove their household effects. The government has turned over to the prefect $2,000 to assist needy peasants.

Streams emitting from four craters have united at the foot of Mount Castellazzo and formed a great river of lava that is bringing death and desolation into the invaded districts. Plants, trees, whole vineyards and orchards have been destroyed by the consuming flood.

This morning the lava river had extended nine miles from its source. Even in this city there was little sleep for anyone last night. The greatest anxiety was felt for friends and relatives and their property interests in the threatened district by those who well know the possibilities of the disaster.

In the path of the advancing flood, the people are in great terror, and thousands had abandoned their homes at daylight. Several houses of peasants already have been destroyed, and it is feared that if the flow does not cease soon, the flood will enter Borrello.

Caravans of peasants, carrying all their household goods and all of their transportable possessions, are moving to places of safety. In their distress they present a pathetic sight. At many homes the molten mass has entered the cellars and caused destructive explosions.

During the last 48 hours the emission of lava, it is estimated, has amounted to 10,000,000 cubic yards.

Earthquakes Increasing.

A slight diminution in the flow of lava was noticed this morning and the

REP. MARTIN CLAIMS SUGAR TRUST IS PERMITTED TO EXPLOIT THE PHILIPPINES

WASHINGTON, March 25.—"The former head of the sugar trust is now at the head of the department of justice, and under this administration the Philippines are being exploited," declared Representative Martin of Colorado, in addressing the House today on the subject of the friar lands in the Philippine islands.

Mr. Martin, referring to his request for an investigation into the acts of the attorney general, which was referred to the committee on rules, said more inquiry into reasons of the attorney general for his opinion as to the amount of sugar land a corporation could own would not be sufficient. The inquiry, he said, would have to go into the facts bearing upon these matters.

In spite of what Mr. Martin claimed was the plain meaning of the act relating to the friar lands, the attorney general had rendered an opinion that there was no limitation in the case of corporations purchasing sugar lands in the islands.

If there was to be no limitation in the amount of land owned by corporations in the Philippines, Mr. Martin said Congress should amend the law and not permit its amendment by means of an opinion by the attorney general.

The chief beneficiary of free trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands he declared, was the sugar trust. Mr. Martin said if novice were not taken of these matters the sugar trust would plead in court at some future day that the silence of Congress was acquiescence.

WIDOW AND SON ARRESTED FOR WHOLESALE THEFT; SURPRISING BOOTY; CHILD CONFESSES

After two weeks of nearly constant work upon the case, the police yesterday succeeded in breaking up the "gang" that for several weeks has been robbing ice boxes and clothes lines all over the city. And the greatest surprise of all is the fact that the "gang" held for the offense are not men, but a preposessing widow, Mrs. Ida Wright, 36 years of age, and her 13-year-old son, Herold. Mrs. Wright was placed in the county jail last night, and the boy was turned over to the humane agent. The mother will be arraigned in justice Tousley's court today, while the boy will probably be taken in charge by the juvenile court. The warrant for Mrs. Wright was sworn out in the justice court yesterday morning, after Detectives Gavin and Fishback, who made are

As a result of the arrest, the police have secured suit cases and a trunk, all filled with household articles, rangi[illegible] fine Haviland china to corsets, [illegible] aprons, in addition to five [illegible] rabbits, and there will be [illegible] inspection at police headquarters today, as it is believed that most of the people who have lost articles in the last three weeks will find their goods in the assortment.

BUILD FAULTY RESERVOIRS

State Engineer Seeks to Enjoin Some Irrigation Enterprises. Julesburg Dam Unsafe

DENVER, March 25.—An opinion to be rendered shortly by Attorney General Barnett relative to the legality and comprehensiveness of the state law giving the state engineer supervision over reservoir construction will determine whether injunction proceedings will be started against several reservoir companies throughout the state.

"If the attorney general finds the law gives full power to the state engineer in such matters, I will at once begin injunction proceedings against several reservoir companies," was the statement made by State Engineer C. W. Comstock today.

Mr. Comstock stated that plans for the Julesburg dam, which broke recently, devastating several miles of country, were never approved by the state engineer and that the construction was faulty. Deputy State Engineer J. W. Johnson, who investigated the breaking of the Julesburg dam, has his report ready for submission to the governor. This report, it is said, substantiates claims of Mr. Comstock.

Mr. Comstock holds that such dams are a menace to life and property and in referring the matter to the attorney general is seeking legal authority to act.

SEIZES AMERICAN VESSELS

Two Schooners Impressed Into Service of Nicaraguan Government as Transports.

BLUEFIELDS, March 25.—The American-owned schooners, Lark and Esfuerze, have been seized by Emigue Espineza, brother of Rodolfo Espineza, former Nicaraguan minister to the United States. They were seized in the name of the constitutional government, taken to Greytown and turned over to the troops of president Madriz to be used as transports.

Owners of the vessels protested to the American consul against the seizure and he notified the commander of the gunboat Paducah, which sailed immediately for Greytown to secure the release of the schooners. The Paducah, however, returned here today without the Lark and Esfuerze, having received instructions from Rear Admiral Kimball that if they were flying a foreign flag they were not to be interfered with.

This decision of Rear Admiral Kimball, it is said, will entirely stop commerce between Bluefields and Prinzapulca, which is the port of entry for the mining camps and which does a large American business, as owners of other American vessels fear they will be seized and held.

The case has been referred to Washington.

TWELVE DIE IN FIRE

assistance. At times they clung to each other, then some of them disappeared with their hair and clothing blazing.

Fire Marshal Horan stated that an investigation as to the preparedness of the building for fire would be made. The building had but one fire escape, he said, whereas it should have had two.

Simon Fish, member of the furniture company, declared the firemen were slow in responding to the alarm and tardy in raising ladders. He protested that firemen interfered with employes, who were attempting to make rescues, and declared he would prefer charges against the fire department.

Elevator Boy a Hero

The elevator boy was the hero of the fire. He was on the fourth floor when the fire broke out and in his effort to reach the elevator he ran to a window and jumped down two floors to the top of another building and then ran downstairs and into the elevator. He started the elevator up to rescue the girls imprisoned in the floors above, but the effort was unsuccessful, for the elevator broke and stuck a little above the first floor.

One of the bodies was identified by Florence Sullivan as that of her sister, Lillian. She said she recognized a shoe taken from one of the bodies as one that had been worn by her sister. Florence, who is 18 years old and a switchboard operator, might easily have shared her sister's fate. She was to have gone to work for the Fish company at noon, taking the place of another girl.

Alexander Bush, a street car conductor, identified one of the bodies as that of Rosio Brunke whom he was to have married on Easter. He recognized her by a number of trinkets, including an engagement ring.

Fire Escapes Insufficient.

An investigation is to be made as to fire escapes on the Fish building. A subordinate official of the fire department tonight made public a letter he had written last August to the fire chief. In it he gave a list of buildings, among them the Fish structure, which he said were in need of fire [illegible]. Referring to the Fish building, he said it "is heavily loaded with inflammable material." The fire department asserts this letter was forwarded to the building department, but no record of it was found in the latter place.

Another Fatal Chicago Fire.

CHICAGO, March 26.—Two persons are known to have been burned to death and several others are believed to have perished in a fire that destroyed a dwelling on South Ashland avenue early this (Saturday) morning.

The burned building was a two-story frame structure occupied by many people.

Some of those who escaped declared a number of people had been trapped. In the hallway firemen stumbled over the bodies of the woman and the child. The woman had endeavored to escape with the child when she was overcome.

Forest Fires Near Pittsburg.

PITTSBURG, March 25.—Reports of serious forest fires are coming in from many sections of this state and West Virginia. Three miles below Parkersburg, W. Va., forests are ablaze and farmers are working frantically to stop the flames.

In Kennedy and Stowe townships, about 10 miles from this city, an area three miles long and two miles wide has been devastated of second growth timber and the loss is estimated at $50,000. Five fire companies and many laborers have been hired at $2.50 a day to fight the fire by cutting down trees and plowing the ground in the path of the flames.

The fires in this section are spectacular. Four gas wells and half a dozen oil wells have become ignited and are shooting their flames into the air with the peculiar siren-like whistle of rushing gas.

Fire on Rockefeller Estate.

TARRYTOWN, N. Y., March 25.—John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and his wife, turned out this afternoon to fight forest fires on the Rockefeller estate in the Pocantico hills.

Under their direction a force of guards succeeded in diverting the flames from all buildings, but they could not extinguish them and a night shift was kept hard at work.

From an unexplained cause the burning at the edge of the Rockefeller forest first caught fire and the flames soon spread to the timber land.

Coal Packets Burning.

NEW YORK, March 25.—Fire in the coal packets of Burns Brothers in Communipaw, N. J., broke out shortly before 10 o'clock tonight, and at midnight seemed to be uncontrollable. There were 100,000 tons of coal in the packets and many loaded coal cars standing 35 feet above on a trestle, 1,400 feet long. The loss will probably exceed $200,000. The fire was extremely spectacular. The flames working beneath the heavy steel cars heated them to whiteness against the sky and then plunged them with a shower of sparks into the furnace below.

MORGANFIELD, Ky., March 25.—Fire supposed to have been of incendiary origin today destroyed business property here to the value of $200,000. Managers of the Green River department store, where the fire started, claim to have received several threatening letters lately from the Black Hand.

NO SCALE DECIDED UPON

Conference Over Miners' Wages in Central Field Closes With Complete Disagreement.

CINCINNATI, March 25.—With a complete disagreement among members the scale committee of the joint conference of miners and operators of Ohio, Indiana and western Pennsylvania will report to the main body and the conference is scheduled to come to a close.

Just what action the miners will then take is a question. A secret caucus was held tonight by the miners' joint scale committee but its result was not announced.

It is known western Pennsylvania and Indiana operators have offered a five cent increase on pick work and Ohio has refused every demand. It is reported that at tomorrow's meeting of the miners' convention the question will be whether to strike in Ohio alone or to refuse all offers and call a general strike.

The latter is thought improbable as the miners believe if they can secure an increased wage scale in western Pennsylvania and Indiana, it will be adhered to throughout the country.

Another alternative that had considerable backing would be the dissolution of the miners' convention with instructions to the various districts to sign new agreements or, failing in this, to begin open warfare.

ETNA POURING LAVA

news brought rejoicing to the scores of villages in which terror-stricken crowds have been praying constantly. This respite however, was of short duration.

The constant rumbling, which have marked the eruption since it started increased in volume today and the earthquakes became more frequent. The ground is in almost constant tremble. More than 70 distinct shocks have been recorded. Troops are rushing to the threatened towns to quell the panic; and aid in saving the helpless.

Perrett Sends a Report.

Mr. Perrett arrived at Nicolosi this evening and immediately sent the following telegram to Catania:

"The great eruption continues with unabated violence. The craters constantly are throwing out liquid fire and rock to a height of 20 meters. It is a magnificent though terrifying spectacle.

"The lava has flowed ten kilometers (about seven miles) in two days. The lower end of the stream is 200 meters broad and five meters high. The stream is advancing 60 meters per hour, destroying vineyards and houses.

"Enormous damage to property has been done. The Alpine clubs refuge has been destroyed.

"The lava will reach and partly destroy Borrello and Belpasso within three days if present conditions continue. Nicolosi is not in danger.

"There is now little smoke from the eruption. The central crater is inactive but there are prolonged rumblings in it. The explosions from the side craters are terrifying.

"I have measured the surface temperature at the lower end of the lava stream and it registered 900 degrees Centigrade. The lava does not form a crust around trees but ignites them.

"Crowds of visitors are enjoying the wonderful spectacle.

"The present eruption is a sequel to the abortive outbreak in April 1909 and was expected and even predicted.

"I hope soon to visit the mouths that have not as yet been visited by anyone. The entire path of the ascent of the volcano is covered with burning lava, in some places shallow and others deep. It is 600 meters broad."

"The final result of the eruption cannot be predicted, all depending upon the duration of the phenomenon. Its latest observations show a slight reduction in the intensity of the eruption."

KING GOING TO SICILY.

ROME, March 25.—King Victor Emmanuel will go to Sicily tomorrow to lead the rescue work and aid in the relief of the victims of the Etna eruption, if the situation does not immediately change for the better. The government has ordered immediate relief measures. Premier Sonnino who has resigned outlining the plans.

The pope today in his private chapel prayed for the inhabitants of the stricken district. He has received reports from Cardinal Francisco Nava, archbishop of Catania which declare the situation is the most grave.

NO DIFINITE ACTION IN THE KLING CASE

National Commission May Come to a Conclusion About Famous Catcher Soon.

CINCINNATI, March 25.—After debating five hours today, the national commission adjourned late this afternoon without taking any definite action regarding the application of Johnny Kling for reinstatement into the good graces of organized baseball.

In giving out the information resulting from the meeting, Chairman Hermann said:

"The national commission has failed thus far to reach an agreement in the Kling case.

"We have exchanged views all along the line and can come to no conclusion. We will exchange additional views by wire or mail during the coming few days, and expect to have a decision ready for promulgation by next Thursday at the latest."

An attempt to gain information from other members of the commission failed utterly, with the exception of the brief statement from both Ban B. Johnson and Thomas J. Lynch, that an agreement would be reached within the next week.

The session of the commission today was a novel one for that body inasmuch as no witnesses were examined but the entire time was taken up in going over evidence already submitted. No new facts were produced and it was evident from the long discussion that one of the members of the commission does not agree with the ideas of the other two. All however, appear certain this difficulty will be overcome.

A HARD PROBLEM

Intercollegiate College Committee Spends Fruitless Day Discussing the Forward Pass.

NEW YORK, March 25.—The forward pass is an element of modern football, both so important and so debatable that the intercollegiate rules committee adjourned tonight after eight hours of active discussion with no progress to report.

"I think a settlement of our differences is in sight," said E. K. Hall of Dartmouth. "In fact, we are nearer a definite agreement now than we have been heretofore, but there is nothing to announce yet."

The sessions were secret and limited information secured from Mr. Hall was all that could be obtained. It was understood that no vote was taken today.

The forward pass has both its advocates and its opponents, and until they can agree there is no knowing in what shape football for 1910 will issue from their deliberations. Preliminary sessions were held last fall in an endeavor to retain the virility and excitement of the game as it now stands, at the same time recasting it into such form as to reduce greatly the chance of death and serious injury.

In the hope of reaching an early agreement this [illegible] on the committee will meet again at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow, but if no settlement seems possible, then adjournment will be taken until later in the spring.

Most of today was spent in an effort to learn on what common grounds members could meet. In the matter of general policy they are in substantial accord, but on details of tactics there was found to be a wide difference of opinion. There was an impression that both the forward pass and the onside kick will be retained for, though no ballot was taken, individual preference came out strongly in the discussion.

DENIES GUGGENHEIMS

far better than I," dramatically exclaimed Mr. Brandeis.

As to his estimate that the coal in Alaska was worth 50 cents a ton and that therefore the Cunningham claims represented an actual value of $25,000,000, Mr Birch declared it was just as sensible to say that the icebergs in Alaska were of inestimable value. The icebergs, he said, would be valuable if they could be brought to market in this country. So it was with the coal, but first the transportation facilities had to be paid.

It was evident today that members of the committee are growing irritable and that this irritability extends to counsel. There were a few clashes and both Mr Brandeis and Mr Vertrees apologized at the close of the session for impatient remarks.

Syndicate's Subsidiary Companies.

At the opening of his examination, Mr Birch said he was managing director of the Alaska Syndicate, composed of J P Morgan and company, and members of the firm of M Guggenheim and Sons. It was founded in March, 1906.

Asked what companies the syndicate was interested in, Mr Birch said the Northwestern Commercial company, the Northwestern Fisheries company, the Copper River and Northwestern Railway company, the Alaska Steamship company, the Kennecott Mines company and the Kattala company.

"Are they all controlled by the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate?" asked Mr Denby.

"Some of them are controlled by the syndicate and in some of them the syndicate is only interested."

Mr Birch gave the financial connection of the syndicate with each company.

Option is Produced

Coming to the matter of the syndicate's option on the Cunningham coal claims Mr Brandeis asked Mr Birch when it was that the syndicate first became interested in the claims. Mr Birch said that he first saw Clarence Cunningham in Seattle, in April, 1907, and again in June, and discussed the matter.

Mr Birch presented a copy of the option given by the claimants to Daniel Guggenheim on the 33 claims of the Cunningham group. Mr Steele who was also present as a representative of the syndicate, said that he could procure the original if it was desired but it was decided to admit the copy in evidence.

Mr Brandeis read at length the option, which was signed by Clarence Cunningham Miles C Moore and A B Campbell, for themselves and their associates. It was dated July 20, 1907 and stipulated the terms whereby the Cunningham group of claims should be turned over to the Morgan-Guggenheim syndicate.

Mr Birch said that his first talk with Cunningham in April 1907 was largely informal. Cunningham's people wanted to open up the field and the syndicate desired to get the coal for the operation of its railroad.

Minutes of Meeting.

Mr Brandeis then read the minutes of the meeting of the Cunningham claimants held in Seattle May 15, at which plans were discussed for the formation of a company to do business with the Guggenheims. There were 18 claimants present.

The minutes recited that the claimants had been approved by E C Eckles, representing the Guggenheim interests seeking to acquire the coal lands and a committee was appointed to draft articles of incorporation.

"Who is Mr Eckles" asked Mr Brandeis.

"He is S W Eckles instead of E C Eckles," said Mr Birch, "and is vice president of the Copper River and Northwestern Railway company and of the American Smelting and Refining company."

Mr Birch said however, that he and not Mr Eckles had the transactions with Cunningham although he had at one time introduced Mr Cunningham to Mr Eckles.

When the option of July 20, 1907 was signed in Salt Lake City Mr Eckles was present. Mr Brandeis read a letter from Clarence Cunningham to Daniel Guggenheim of August 17, 1907 and submitted by Mr Birch which said:

The commissioner tells me that everything will be cleaned up within 90 days.

This referred to the Cunningham claims for which patents were pending. Mr Ballinger was the commissioner mentioned.

Mr Birch and Mr Steele presented [illegible] letters and telegrams which passed between the parties interested in the option which Mr Brandeis read.

Continuing Mr Birch said that pursuant to the agreement of July [illegible] 1907 the syndicate sent its mining expert Mr Storrs to Alaska to make an examination of the coal properties.

"Have you [illegible] report?" asked Mr Brandeis.

Wants Report Suppressed

Mr Birch [illegible] Mr Steele [illegible] file a protest against making it report public. He said he was [illegible] that it should be examined by the counsel and by the committee, but it was a private document and he thought it ought not to be made public.

Mr Brandeis said he would not consent to an agreement not to make the document public and the committee will decide the matter in secret session.

Mr Brandeis read a telegram from Mr Guggenheim in New York to Clarence Cunningham in Seattle in which he said he formally accepted the option of July 20, 1907. This telegram was dated December 7, 1907. Following this there was introduced a communication from Cunningham asking to see Guggenheim in which he said he hoped the patents would soon arrive so they could take up active development.

Because the syndicate could not establish a harbor at Kattala Mr Birch said they had projected their line of railroad from Cordova instead of Kattala and following this Cunningham had come to him and said that on account of this change he did not consider that the syndicate had any agreement with his associates.

Double-Crossed Cunningham

"As a matter of fact," said Mr Brandeis "you had reached the decision before that option was accepted, hadn't you?"

"Yes, sir, but Cunningham did not know it."

"Did you regard Cunningham's statement as serious?"

"Yes, very important but we thought that if we had the contract it would hold just the same."

"There was nothing in the contract, was there, that you should build your road from Kattala?"

"No sir."

Further questioning brought out the fact that even constructing this line from Cordova the syndicate intended to tap the Cunningham coal fields. This line was now, witness said, about 50 miles from the Cunningham claims.

Worthless Without Transportation.

"Mr. Birch, what is the value of the Cunningham coal property?" asked Mr Vertrees.

"At the present time it has no value."

"You say so because the patents have not been issued?"

"I mean the coal in the ground there at present has no value. There is no transportation and a market has got to be found for it. You can't tell what it is going to cost to mine the coal."

"Is it any more problematic than it was when you testified before the committee on territories?"

"We were assuming transportation facilities at that time and assuming also a mining cost of $1.75 a ton and a sale price of $2.25 a ton."

"You testified that there were 500,000,000 tons of coal in the Katalla field."

"Yes, it was estimated by the engineers that the Cunningham group contained $50,000,000 and represented about one-tenth the value of the entire field."

Representative Graham asked Mr Birch if the testimony he gave before the committee on territories was in general correct and could be considered as sworn testimony in the present proceedings.

"Yes," he replied, "but I don't think I would have said as much as I did if I had known I was talking to a press gallery."

"But the report of your testimony is a government document."

"I know it, but it had been printed in every paper in the United States. It has been abused."

Pay $11.88 a Ton for Coal

Mr Birch said the Guggenheims were operating their railroad properties in Alaska with Columbia coal which costs $11.88 a ton at Cordova, Alaska.

"And you can't use the coal right at your doors?" suggested Senator Nelson.

"No, sir, the government won't let us."

The reason the 'government won't let us,' appeared to be that no patents had been granted.

Mr. Brandeis read to the witness the affidavit made by Mr Cunningham in March, 1908, in which he declared the Guggenheims had no interest in the claims and that there had been no written agreement with any corporation.

"Did Mr Cunningham confer with you before making that affidavit?" demanded Mr Brandeis.

"No, sir."

"When did you first learn of that affidavit?"

"Just now."

The Alaska syndicate Mr Birch contended has no interest in any Alaska coal lands other than the interest it may have in the Cunningham group.

Mr Brandeis and the witness got into a wordy wrangle as to the latter's proposition to buy an interest in the Hartline group of claims. The attorney sought to show Birch was acting for the Guggenheims. The witness asserted he was capable financially of buying the whole Hartline group. He wanted that thoroughly understood. He was willing to take it as a speculation.

Denies Existence of Monopoly

Representative [illegible] asked [illegible] witness [illegible] number [illegible] the Guggenheims [illegible] have a monopoly of transportation [illegible] Alaska from [illegible] United States Mr Birch declared that the syndicate owned 12 ships, while competing lines operate 28. He denied that the Yukon and White Pass railroad was controlled by the syndicate or by any of its members.

As to reaching the copper country Mr Birch said if anybody else wished to get there he could do as the Guggenheims did—build a railroad.

"Now, Mr Birch," concluded Representative Graham, "if the syndicate owned the Alaska coal it would own Alaska, would it not?"

"No, sir."

"How much money has the syndicate invested in Alaska?" asked Mr Brandeis.

"About $17,000,000."

"What dividend does this syndicate pay?" asked Representative Olmstead.

"None. We have put all that money in and have not got a cent out yet."

The witness said that, despite all this, the syndicate had "hopes."

Representative Madison asked if it was not a fact that the Alaska syndicate steamship company handled more of the business from the United States to Alaska than did all the other lines put together.

Mr Birch was not willing to admit this. He said he would submit the figures later.

Mr Birch said if there was no competition to Alaska rates would be much higher.

Representative Madison wanted also to know if it was not true that there was a "gigantic scheme on foot to control a great part of Alaska?"

"That is your inference," remarked the witness.

Questioned About Patents.

Mr. Brandeis drew from the witness the fact that the development of Alaska depended almost wholly upon the opening of the coal fields. When he had done this, he turned fiercely upon the witness and demanded to know that if in view of this fact the Guggenheims had sat quietly for two years and made no exertion to have patents in the Cunningham group.

"All we did was to tell Cunningham to hurry up with his patents."

"Do you mean to say that with all the influence and power of the Morgans and Guggenheims in this country they make no efforts in this direction except your feeble efforts? Is that what you wish this committee to understand?"

"It is."

"All this influence and power went for nothing?"

"What could we do? We had nothing to do with the patents, did we?"

"Mr Birch I think you are better able to answer that than I," remarked the attorney dramatically.

When the committee and Mr Brandeis finally had concluded their direct and cross-examinations of the witness he was turned over to Mr Vertrees.

Mr Birch said the Alaska syndicate had spent $1,000,000 in an ineffectual attempt to construct a harbor at Katalla. This was in 1906 or 1907, before there was an option on the Cunningham claims.

"We wanted to be near the coal fields," he said, "for we thought that some day somebody would get patents and open the fields so we could buy the coal."

Mr Birch said it was in January or February, 1908, that Cunningham claimed option agreement had been made void by the action of the Guggenheims in changing their railroad base from Katalla to Cordova.

"Didn't he state further that it had also been void by the fact that few of his principals had ratified the agreement?" asked Mr Vertrees.

"He did."

"And from that day to this has any member of your syndicate by writing or otherwise indicated to Cunningham that they still considered the option agreement in effect?"

"No sir."

Sought Legislation for Alaska

Mr Birch said he went to see Mr [illegible] when he was secretary [illegible] asking [illegible] legislation [illegible] Alaska [illegible] satisfy [illegible] was passed [illegible] Garfield [illegible] congress from New York [illegible] thought this law was rotten and unconstitutional. I thought the bill robbed a man of his inherent rights. Mr. Parsons asked me to write a letter and to inclose copies for Mr. Garfield and for Mr Roosevelt."

The witness produced the letter and it was read in evidence. The objections to the bill were largely technical in character and set out in great detail.

In effect the letter protested that the new law would not encourage development of Alaska.

When Mr Vertrees concluded his brief cross-examination, Attorney Brandeis returned to the attack and demanded if the Guggenheims had tried to control all the wharfage at Cordova. He asked particularly if Jack Dalton of Dalton trail fame, and not tried to erect a wharf near the company's property and been thrown in jail in consequence.

"Jack put up a hut and drove a few piles in front of our property," said the witness, "but it was purely a graft scheme. Some of his friends came to us and wanted to know if we did not want to buy Jack out rather than have trouble. That's all there was to that."

This ended the testimony of Mr Birch, and the committee adjourned until tomorrow.

ROOSEVELT VISITS EGYPTIAN TOMBS

Egyptians and plied the Egyptologist with numerous questions. One sarcophagus was opened and lighted candles were lowered into it in order to show how the mammoth bulls were lowered into their final resting places.

From the tombs of the bulls, the party proceeded to the temples and the tomb of Thy a plebeian who lived in the fifth dynasty but who was so esteemed that he was permitted to marry a princess. Their offspring became princes.

Here Colonel Roosevelt and his family were joined by Oscar S. Straus, American ambassador to Turkey, and by Mrs Straus, Mr. Iddings and Miss Iddings.

On the walls of the tomb of Thy are various sculptures and paintings, which, though they were executed about 3500, B C, still are legible. These were greatly admired and Colonel Roosevelt, with his usual keen perception, pointed out to the archaeologist the pictures of various animals he had seen lately in the jungle but which are extinct in upper Egypt. He declared that the fact that they were reproduced in the tomb of Thy was proof that the animals once had roamed this country. Colonel Roosevelt was also deeply interested in pictures showing an Egyptian stuffing geese, a swan and a hyena, which in the olden days were used as food.

Moving Picture Man on Hand

From the temple Colonel Roosevelt and his party repaired to the home of the archaeologist, where they stopped for light refreshments. Between the temples and the tombs and the temple and the archaeologist's home Mr Roosevelt insisted on walking ahead of his party, members of which had a hard struggle to keep up with him. The privacy of the Americans was invaded during the tour by a moving picture man who focused his machine upon them and rolled off yard after yard of films.

After refreshments the entire party continued their sightseeing trip toward the Nile. In recrossing the desert Mrs Roosevelt and Mrs Straus occupied the sand cart. Colonel Roosevelt, Miss Roosevelt and Miss Iddings chose camels as their means of transport, while Kermit, Ambassador Straus and Mr Iddings rode donkeys.

Arrived at the Nile the party took a launch out to a dahabiya or large river boat where Colonel Roosevelt was welcomed by George Wyssa Bey his wife his brother and his sister all of whom were educated at the mission schools at Assiut and Beirut.

Later Colonel Roosevelt and Kermit paid a visit to the Cairo zoological gardens and inspected with much interest specimens there. Mrs Roosevelt and Miss Ethel and other members of the party meanwhile had retired to the hotel to rest for the banquet tonight.

No Politics in Straus' Visit.

The visit to Cairo of Mr Straus is without political bearing. He came merely as a personal friend of Colonel Roosevelt in whose cabinet he served as secretary of commerce and labor. He will return to Constantinople next week.

Colonel Roosevelt animates the thought of all Cairo. Everyone is watching his movements and his sayings are of intense interest. Americans are everywhere to be seen in Cairo. Three hundred of them who are on tour today sent an address of welcome to Colonel Roosevelt congratulating him on his safe return to civilization. Colonel Roosevelt will hold a reception for the Americans tomorrow.

The hotels have never before here so crowded. Among arrivals today were Prince Eitel Frederick, son of the German emperor and Wu Ting Fang former Chinese minister to the United States who is on the way home. He hopes to see Colonel Roosevelt before he leaves.

Colonel Roosevelt's [illegible] now includes a visit to Ashar university. He will attend the Easter service in the American church Sunday and afterward take dinner with the sirdar. [illegible] Colonel Roosevelt will give a lecture at the Egyptian university.

RETAIL TRADE HELPED BY WARM WEATHER

Bradstreet's Notes Revival of Business and Improvement in Industrial Situation.

NEW YORK March 25.—Bradstreet's tomorrow will say:

The week's developments have been generally favorable. Chief among these has been the advent of warm spring weather which, coupled with the near approach of Easter, has stimulated retail trade at all markets, allowed of expansion in the building trades, the preparation of the ground in the north for planting and the beginning of seeding of grain and cotton at the south and of oats and vegetables in the middle regions of the country.

The industrial situation, too, has measurably improved in the collapse of the sympathetic strike at Philadelphia, the return to work of many thousands of idle hands there and the submitting of the western railroad men's demand to arbitration.

In wholesale, features are the slight improvement in jobbing trade reported as a result of the picking up of reorder business in spring goods at the west, the revision of bleached and brown cotton goods leading to some increase in business past and west and the signs of improvement in foreign demand for cotton goods induced by attractive prices.

Business failures in the United States for the week ending March 24, were 231, against 208 last week, 226 in the like week of 1909, 256 in 1908, 166 in 1907 and 169 in 1906.

It is expected that the road will voluntarily increase the pay of the men under terms of the Chicago agreement, and the serving of the notice was simply a formality. Similar notices will be served on the Union Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy and the Denver & Rio Grande.

CHICAGO, March 25.—The arbitrators in the dispute between 30,000 firemen and engineers and 48 western railroads were chosen by the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Enginemen and the railroads today.

REPORT ON LIBERIA SENT TO CONGRESS

Commission Recommends That United States Extend Aid to Black Republic.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—Pressed upon one side by France and beset by Great Britain on the other Liberia is between two millstones which threaten to grind it off the map unless the nation has the support of some power commensurate in strength with Great Britain and France. That is one of the principal conclusions expressed in the report of the American commission to Liberia transmitted to Congress today by President Taft with a special message.

After reviewing the internal dangers which threaten Liberia as well as those crowding from the outside, the commission has made the following recommendations:

1. That the United States extend its aid to Liberia in the prompt settlement of her boundary disputes.
2. That the United States enable Liberia to refund its debt by assuming as a guarantee for the payment of obligations under such an arrangement the control and collection of Liberian customs.
3. That the United States lend its assistance to the reform of the internal finances.
4. That this nation aid in organizing and drilling a competent constabulary or frontier police.
5. That the United States establish and maintain a research station there.
6. That the United States reopen the question of establishing a naval coaling station in Liberia.

CROWDS CONTINUE

Large Audience Hears Riddell Lecture on "Heredity and Parental Culture" Sunday Address.

Every available inch of seating and standing room in the First Methodist church, and hundreds turning away for want of accommodations, was the enthusiastic reception tendered to Mr. Riddell last night. His theme was "Heredity and Parental Culture." The lecture was scientific and scholarly.

The following is a brief digest of last night's lecture.

Man at his best is the product of three forces—generation, education and regeneration—the force of heredity, the force of environment and the grace of God. No one or two of these can take the place of the others, therefore they are incomparable. It is irrational to say that one is more important than another. To be well born is to receive the greatest gift within the power of parentage; to grow up in a favorable environment and be well educated is to receive the greatest gift within the power of society; to be born again is the gift of God. The school is emphasizing the factor of education, the church the influence of religion.

According to the most reliable statistics obtainable, there was, in 1850, in the United States, one criminal for every 3,000 persons. In 1900 there was one criminal for every 560 persons. In studying 150,000 insane, 125,000 criminals, 150,000 feebleminded and 150,000 epileptics, it was found that morbid heredity was the principal cause in 45 per cent of the insane, 70 per cent of criminals and 80 per cent of the feeble-minded and epileptic.

Commercialism is responsible for much bad heredity. It fosters class hatred, which, in turn, causes the spirit of anarchy to be inborn. The overworked masses give birth to most of the children, therefore poor inheritance is the lot of the majority. The instinct for making money by gambling and dishonest methods is developing with alarming rapidity. Over 20 times as much money changes hands in games of chance as did 50 years ago in proportion to the population and money in circulation.

Alcohol is the chief cause of degeneracy—the father of the dependent and delinquent classes. It is difficult to determine the exact proportion of defective offspring from inebriate parents, but the most reliable statistics obtainable indicate that of children born from temperate parents, 21 per cent dies before the age of 5 years, or become dependent or delinquent before the age of 60, while of children born from inebriates 83 per cent dies in infancy or are affected by morbid heredity and become dependent or delinquent before the age of 50.

Where only one parent is alcoholic about 45 per cent of the offspring that survives infancy manifests some abnormal tendency. In studying the heredity of 2,000 erring girls, it was found that 1,140 of them had drunken mothers, and 1,464 had drunken fathers. Fully 60 per cent of all erring women and habitual criminals are born from drunken or neurotic stock."

There will no lecture tonight, but at 3:30 p. m., tomorrow, Mr. Riddell will speak to men on "The New Man." This will be held in the First Methodist church, the same as all the other lectures. The meeting will be under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. The regular lecture course for everyone will be resumed Monday night. Subject, "Christian Mysteries Unveiled."

SUPPOSED DANCERS ARE MERE FICTION

Thus Charles A. Payne Talks of Uncivilized Countries.—To Speak on Turkey Tonight.

That most of the supposed dangers of travel in uncivilized and semicivilized countries are mere fiction, is the opinion of Charles A. Payne, a well-known lecturer and traveler, who spoke at the Opera House last Friday night as a number of the Y. M. C. A. Star course. Mr. Payne, who is spending a few days in Colorado Springs, said last night that all one needs as protection is 'a friendly spirit and a smiling face.'

These are good enough passports, especially among the Arabs, Bedouins and Turks," said Mr. Payne last night.

Mr. Payne has made a study of Turkey, which was brought to the front at the recent laymen's missionary convention in this city, and as a result, Mr. Payne has consented to speak upon the subject tonight at 8:15 o'clock in the assembly room of the Y. M. C. A. building. His talk will be in the nature of a lecture, and will be illustrated with stereopticon views.

Secretary Hall of the Y. M. C. A. said yesterday that the lecture "will be given on the Boston plan, pay as you go out."

Turks Great People.

"Many of the unspeakable Turks are scholarly, refined gentlemen," said Mr. Payne yesterday, "indeed some of them become very warm friends. As a race the Turks are really a great people. The average Turk is about a thousand years behind Americans, but this is due mostly to his Mohammedan faith and his veiled women. Some of the Turks are in advance of many Americans, while others are so far the opposite extreme as to be hardly human.

"The terrible atrocities in Turkey in recent years have been largely due to Abdul Hamid, absolute ruler over his millions of subjects, the most polished diplomat, the biggest coward, and as Gladstone said, the 'arch assassin' of the world. He gave free rein to the worst fanatics and basest elements of his empire if they paid the price. What American state or city could endure such rule!

"The condition of the women among Mohammedans turns their world upside down. Think of a world in which girls are sold by their fathers and given as presents to court favorites as one might give a beautiful horse!"

Mr. Payne will be in the city tomorrow, when he will speak at one of the churches in the city.

ADDRESS MEN'S MEETING

Riddell Will Talk Tomorrow on "The New Man and Twentieth Century Problems."

Newton N. Riddell, whose lectures during the last week have attracted such large audiences and created so much interest and discussion, will address a mass meeting of men only in the First Methodist church tomorrow afternoon at 3:30 o'clock.

Mr. Riddell's theme will be "The New Man and Twentieth Century Problems." This is his most celebrated lecture. Over 250,000 men have heard it and as many more read it. Commenting on it, Charles W. Whorral, Ph. D., says: "If Andrew Carnegie would endow the 'New Man' with $100,000 and send Professor Riddell forth the inspired prophet to the masses, he would do more good than by building 20 libraries."

INDORSE TAYLOR BILL

County Commissioners Pass Resolution Approving Proposed Land Gift to State.

The county commissioners yesterday passed a resolution indorsing the bill recently introduced in Congress by Representative Edward T. Taylor, providing that the government turn over certain government lands to the state, to be sold and the proceeds appropriated to the improvements of roads. The resolution will be forwarded to Congress. Should the bill be passed, about 200,000 acres of land in Colorado will be given to the state for this purpose. The resolution adopted yesterday follows:

Whereas, The Hon. Edward T. Taylor, member of Congress at large for Colorado, has introduced into the United States House of Representatives a bill granting to the state of Colorado public lands to be sold under certain restrictions and the proceeds thereof used for the construction and improvement of public highways, under the supervision of the state highway commission.

Resolved, That this board heartily approves of the said bill and asks for its favorable consideration by the Congress of the United States, believing that its passage would greatly promote the settlement and growth of this county and the whole state of Colorado and be a material relief from heavy taxation for road purposes.

PEOPLE ARE PUTTING IN NEW MAIL BOXES

The request of Postmaster Shachan that residents of Colorado Springs who receive their mail at their homes provide letter boxes, so that the carrier will not be compelled to wait at each house until someone answers the doorbell, is meeting with general attention. Mr. Shachan said yesterday that in the south end of the city 75 per cent of the people now have boxes. In some other sections of the city, however, the percentage is not so great.

WIDOW TESTIFIES

Mrs. Cora M. Botts Tells Experience With Rocky Mt. Mfg. Co. Looking for Witnesses

The case of Helen T. Myers and Beatrice MacDonald against the Rocky Mountain Manufacturing company and Nella and Walter Winkler, the defendants, both formerly of this city, was begun in the district court yesterday, and will be resumed when other witnesses are found. All the alleged creditors of the Winklers and the company have combined in the above named case.

A feature of the testimony yesterday was that given by Mrs. Cora M. Botts of 111 North Weber street, a widow, who came here from Rosemead, Ind., in 1908. Mrs. Botts said that she gave about $30,000 worth of property for $1,400 cash, 21,000 shares of stock in the Rocky Mountain Manufacturing company, a number of promissory notes of doubtful value and a first mortgage of $20,000 on part of her property, which mortgage she later traded for a mortgage on ranch land in this state, the value of which she does not know. Her property consisted of the Rosemead ranch, valued at $40,000 and other property in Indiana and in Los Angeles, Cal.

JUROR SHOWS PLUCK

Though Ill, Charles Eveland Would Not Give Up Until Verdict Was Reached.

Although in much pain from erysipelas especially on the last of the three days of the trial Charles A. Eveland, an expressman living at 336 East Las Vegas street, stuck to his post as a juror in the district court in the suit of John M. Smith against Andrew W. Shelton until a sealed verdict was reached last Thursday night, when he was removed to his home. He was resting easy last night, although his advanced age may prevent his recovery. Eveland is about 60 years old.

The verdict, as read in the district court yesterday morning, gives Smith, the plaintiff, $2,500, the full amount demanded. The claim is based on alleged fraudulent sale of stock in the Yout Mountain Mining company in which both Smith and Shelton were interested. Attorney Arthur Cornforth for the defense was given 15 days in which to file motion for a new trial.

THREW LAMP AT HIM

"Some Lady Got Angry," and Fire Department Is Called Out as a Result.

"Some lady just got angry and threw the lighted lamp at her gentleman friend," was the explanation given the firemen last night when they responded to a fire alarm from 16 North Sierra Madre street. The fire in question was in a house occupied by Sadie Thomas, colored, and occurred at 6:45 o'clock. The quick response of fire companies from No. 3 and central stations, resulted in the flames being extinguished before any material damage was done.

Shortly before this alarm, the department was called out to extinguish a small fire in Hastings Heights, northeast of the city, caused by grass burning. The flames were put out in short order.

AL G FIELD'S MATINEE TODAY

A G Field and his minstrel show will give a matinee at the Opera House this afternoon at popular prices, 25 cents to $1.00. There are still many good seats for the matinee and evening performances. The night prices range from 50 cents to $1.50.

The Al G Field minstrels are the oldest and the newest minstrel organization in America. It is the oldest because it was established 24 years ago, and has run continuously and successfully ever since the date of its inception. It is likewise the newest because the only old thing about the Al G Field show is the trademark, the performance each year combines the latest novelties of minstrelsy and the veteran manager seems always able to surpass each previous effort.

One point wherein Field differs from other so-called minstrel organizations is that Field sticks to the traditions of America. He inculcates new ideas, to be sure, but the Field show is always a minstrel show, produced in a minstrel setting and operated on a minstrel basis. Field makes innovations without deviation from the right path. Four new productions are promised in the minstrel show "The Evolution of Minstrelsy" is a magnificent scenic spectacle embracing unique mechanical and electrical effects an ensemble of 26 minstrels in gorgeous costume, and enough mirth and melody to satisfy the most exacting. "The Head Waiters" is a spectacular dancing number in which Doc Quigley and four famed dancers participate. "The Frog's Wedding" is a transformation, while another excruciation feature is entitled "Baked Alive."

GRAND OPERA IN ENGLISH

Colorado Springs music lovers will have an opportunity of hearing the principal numbers of Verdi's "Il Trovatore" and Flotow's "Martha" sung in English with elaborate scenic and costume effects at the Opera House Monday, with a special Easter Monday matinee. Le Brun Grand Opera company will be heard on that occasion for the first time in this city and if reports from the large eastern cities are true, an unusual musical treat awaits those who hear the performances.

The entire second act of "Martha" will be sung. Madame Le Brun will appear as Martha, the disguised Lady Harriet. Mlle. Madeleine Vance as Nancy, the maid. Fritz Huttmann as Lionel and Louis La Valle as Plunkett. Among the selections to be heard are the spinning wheel quartet, "'Tis the Last Rose of Summer," "This Is Your Future Dwelling," and the exquisite farewell trio, "Fly in Haste We."

In the "Il Trovatore" scenes, Mme Le Brun sings the role of Leonora, Mlle Vance portrays Azucena, Fritz Huttmann, Manrico and Louis La Valle the Count di Luna. The numbers to be sung include among others "Tacea la notte placida e bella," "The Night Calmly and Peacefully," "Deserto sulla terra," "Lonely on Earth Abiding," "Inida, qual voce," "Deceiver, Those Accents," "Stride la vampa," Azucena's aria, "D'amor sull' ali rosee," "On Rosy Wings of Love Depart," the Miserere, "Se m'ami ancor," "If Filial Love," "Home to Our Mountains."

Thus the Le Brun selections take in all the really worth while numbers from "Il Trovatore" and the gems of "Martha." Seats are selling at popular prices.

BUSONI, GREATEST PIANIST SINCE RUBINSTEIN

"Since Rubinstein," said yesterday evening one of the most distinguished professors in Montreal, coming out from Windsor hall, "we have not had any pianist like Busoni." And he went on as follows: "Paderewski has more poetry, but he subordinates everything to himself, before him the personality of the master whom he interprets disappears. Busoni is Beethoven, Bach, Liszt, Mendelssohn, Chopin, and never does he impose himself on the master whom he interprets. As for his power, that is extraordinary. He is a musician and, if I may put it so, objective in the same way as Paderewski is subjective. Paderewski, Pugno, de Pachmann, have not a single point for comparison, except that they, like him, play the piano, but not at all like him."

Busoni has been called the Titan of the piano, and never was there a description so exact in so few words. He plays Chopin excellently, with a tonal beauty, an elegance, a virility alternating with tenderness, that are altogether admirable.

No pianist—not even Rubinstein or Paderewski—has ever played the funeral march—"night winds sweeping over the churchyard graves," as Rubinstein called it—in a more eerie, thrilling manner than Busoni. The modern French impressionists who are trying to make tonal chaos musical were here anticipated by Chopin in a way they will never equal.

Liszt ruled in the last part of the recital, and Liszt is the idol of Busoni, as he is of every pianist or music lover who is worth a pinch of salt. That Mr. Busoni undertook to edit Liszt, the [illegible] of all music, need not worry any one. Liszt would have been the first to applaud any suggested improvement made by an artist of Busoni's caliber. He himself constantly altered his music, particularly when playing, indeed, he refused for years to let the publishers have his operatic fantasies and transcriptions, because he was constantly altering them. He wanted them to have the effect of improvisations. In that spirit, Mr Busoni plays them. Apart from that, the most enjoyable feature of his performance was his skill in reproducing orchestral colors on the piano. "Where is that harp?" many may have wondered at one place in the "Mephisto Waltz." In the "Faust" transcription in particular, it was amazing and delectable to note how, with the aid of pedals and changes in touch, he suggested the alternation of different orchestral groups, coloring the music in their own way. Was it a wonder the audience not only applauded wildly, but cheered and yelled? Only one Busoni recital in New York? What nonsense!—N. Y. Evening Post.

The Busoni recital takes place next Thursday evening in the Opera House, under the auspices of the Colorado Springs Musical club. Sale of seats begins Monday, March 28, at the Willis Piano Store, 23 E. Kiowa St.

GRAND OPERA PROGRAM AT VAUDEVILLE PRICES

A grand opera program at vaudeville prices. That is what Manager Tammen of the Majestic has been offering his patrons all this week, much to their appreciation and delight. Today's three performances offer the last chance to hear the finest musical program ever offered in this city in the name of vaudeville.

The Zingari troupe of seven singers all experienced in opera work and possessed of magnificent voices is the stellar attraction. With a stage setting showing the street of an Italian city and in the costume of street singers they give a brilliant program, including the Toreador song from Carmen, the famous sextet from Lucia, a prayer song, drinking song, "The Last Rose of Summer," "O, Maria, Mari" finale from Martha and "Funiculi Funicula." All are magnificently rendered and the audience is loath to let them go.

In addition to this grand feature there is the character singing of Gertrude Van Dyck, the girl with two voices, and the instrumental work of the Three Keltons, both fine acts. It is a rare musical treat.

A Western Romance.

The story tells of two children who are betrothed, while both are living in the east in conformity to a clause in a will by the provisions of which a fortune is left to the little girl providing she marries the boy before her twenty-fifth birthday. Shortly after the betrothal the parents of the little girl move to the west, where she grows up forgetting entirely the sweetheart of her childhood days.

When she learns that her hand was promised in marriage while still a child she refuses to abide by it, protesting that she will never marry any man unless she loves him. Of course her mother writes this to her old friend, the mother of the boy, and also sends a photograph of the girl. When the young man sees the picture he falls in love with the original at once and starts for the west, under an assumed name, to win her love and affection, the young lady, of course, being unaware of his intended visit.

Arriving at the little town in the west he finds he has a rival, but has little difficulty in taking the lead in this race for love. In fact he makes so deep an impression on the start and progresses so rapidly in his love-making that he has the field entirely to himself so far as the young lady is concerned. His rival, recognizing the necessity of prompt action if he is not to lose out in his suit, hires some of the Indians of his neighborhood to do away with our hero and they are only prevented from doing so by his sweetheart, who had overheard the plot and who rescues him in a thrilling manner. Shortly after this the young lady and her mother visit the east, and there the young lady is again urged to marry her childhood sweetheart. She refuses emphatically, protesting that her heart has been given to another, unaware of the fact that this other is her boy lover under an assumed name. When this discovery is made the young lady offers as fine a bit of emotional acting as has ever been seen in a moving picture. The logical ending of the story follows.

"SHORTY KING" SORE

Wanted to Work but Police Chief Would Not Let Him Has Few Days to Serve.

"Shorty" King, better known to the police as Happy Hooligan, who is serving out a sentence in the city jail for drunkenness, was very unhappy yesterday because the officer in charge at police headquarters would not allow him to go to work.

King has but a few more days to serve, and as his conduct while in the city institution has been very good, he is allowed to help care for the horses in the city stable. Yesterday some one offered him a job with pay if he would dig a garden, and Shorty at once made application to Chief Armstrong to be allowed to leave his duties at the city hall, and take the job. He was much disappointed when his application was refused, and could not seem to realize why he should not be allowed to go out and earn a little money, even though he is getting free board and room from the city for several days yet.

DOG DECIDES TO MAKE POLICE STATION HIS HOME

Evidently aware that the man with the blue coat and brass buttons is usually in a position to protect the people from wrongdoers, a cur dog walked into the desk sergeant's place of business early yesterday morning, and since that time has refused to leave the police station. In the words of one of the policemen, the dog has "adopted them."

Yesterday many efforts were made to get the dog to leave but he seems to be perfectly satisfied with the quarters, and spent all the daylight hours sleeping and getting under the feet of the men around the station.

That the animal has not met with a more joyous reception is probably due to the fact that some time ago another dog, apparently of some value, strayed into the station, but, after a stay of a few hours strayed away again, despite the many offers on the part of the policemen to be friends with him and take care of him.

MOULTON LECTURE TO BE VERY INTERESTING

The coming conference of the science department of the Colorado State Teachers association, which is to be held in Colorado Springs, April 1 and 2, will be the occasion for a public lecture on scientific subjects, such as residents of the city are not often afforded. This lecture will be given the night of April 1 at Perkins hall by Professor F. R. Moulton, a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago. Professor Moulton will take as his subject, "Other Worlds Than Ours."

ASHBY SENDS CHINESE PAPER TO THIS CITY

A copy of a Hongkong China newspaper was received by The Herald yesterday from Walter Ashby of Colorado Springs who, with Mrs Ashby and W. H Bacon, also of this city, is in China on a trip around the world. There is no English in the paper, but from cuts shown in some of the advertisements, it is apparent that familiar American advertisements are there in Chinese. Mr. Ashby penciled on the margin of the paper: "I find nothing in this paper regarding street paving or voting the town dry."

CHANGE IN PLANS CAUSES A DELAY

Owing to the necessity of a change in the plans, work on the proposed new addition to the First Presbyterian church will not begin for two months. It was found, upon the receipt of bids, that the addition planned would cost in the neighborhood of $35,000 while only $30,000 has been secured. Cheaper material is to be used in some parts of the building than was at first contemplated.

WOMAN'S GENTLE NATURE CALLS FOR GENTLE TREATMENT

Delicately formed and gently reared, women will find, in all the seasons of their lives, as maidens, wives or mothers, that the one simple, wholesome remedy which acts gently and pleasantly and naturally, and which may be used with truly beneficial effects, under any conditions, when the system needs a laxative, is—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna. It is well known to be a simple combination of the laxative and carminative principles of plants with pleasant aromatic liquids, which are agreeable and refreshing to the taste and acceptable to the system when its gentle cleansing is desired.

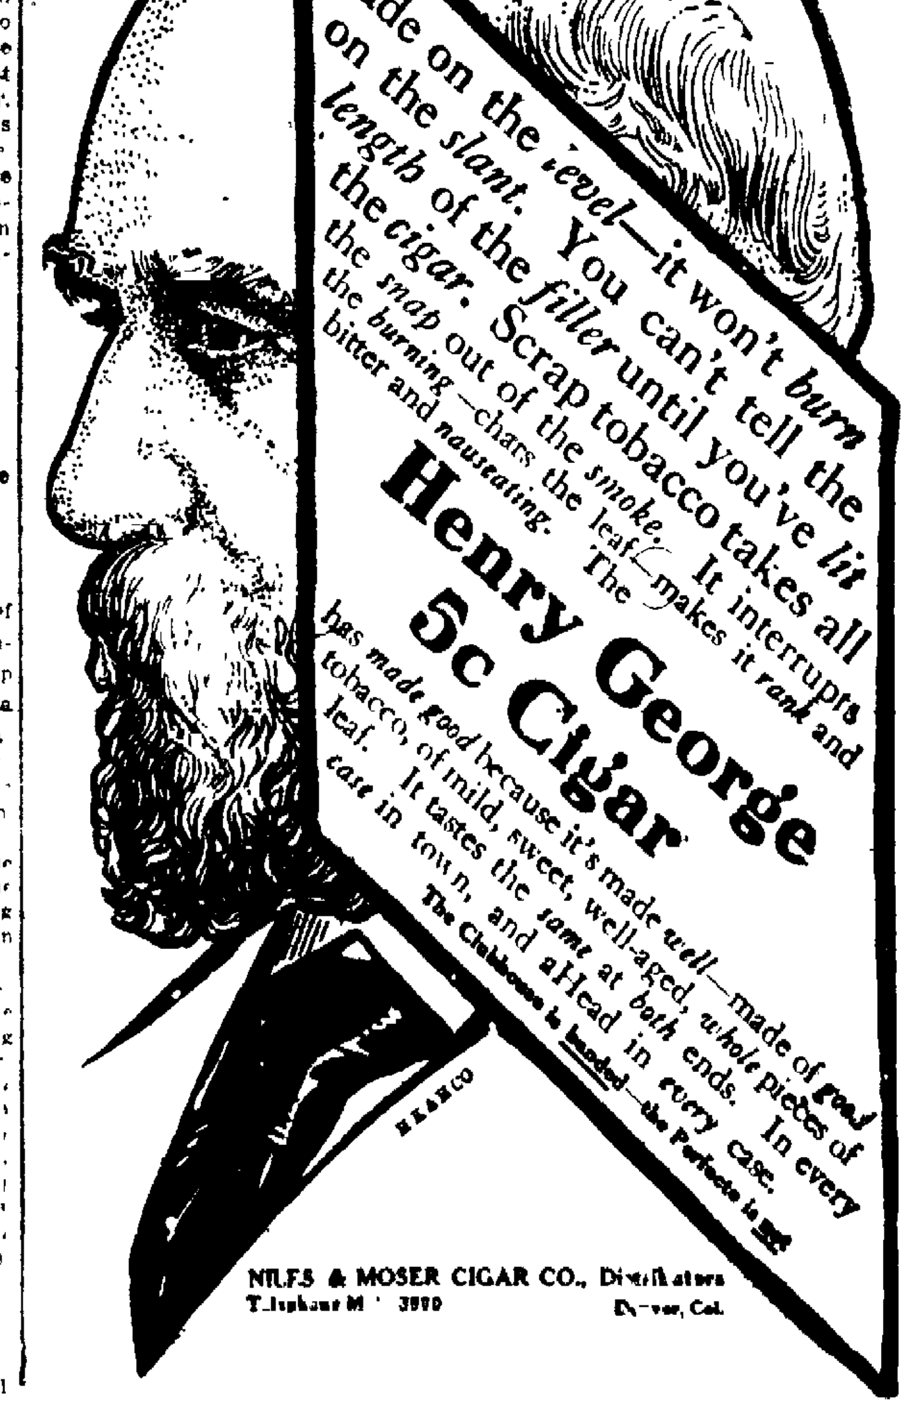

Only those who buy the genuine Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna can hope to get its beneficial effects, and as a guarantee of the excellence of the remedy, the full name of the company—California Fig Syrup Co.—is printed on the front of every package, and without it any preparation offered as Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is fraudulent and should be declined. To those who know the quality of this excellent laxative, the offer of any substitute, when Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna is called for, is always resented by a transfer of patronage to some first-class drug establishment, where they do not recommend, nor sell false brands, nor imitation remedies. The genuine article may be bought of all reliable druggists everywhere, one size only. Regular price 50 cents per bottle. Get a bottle today to have in the house when needed.

WOMEN FRIGHTENED

Man on Bicycle Causes Annoyance Near Garfield School—Close Lookout for Him

People living in the central part of the city, especially those in the neighborhood of the Garfield school, are up in arms because of the action of a young man, hardly more than a boy, according to the descriptions given, who for the last two days has been frightening girls and young women. While the man has attempted no assaults thus far his actions terrified the women and girls in that portion of the city and an organized search is being made for him. The police have been notified.

The first report was given out yesterday, when it was learned that the fellow had frightened several young girls. They at once notified their parents and an effort was made to locate the man, but he had disappeared. A few minutes later it became known that he had gone through the same performance near the Garfield school. Good descriptions have been furnished and special men have been ordered to watch for the offender. From the stories of all of the girls it is learned that the man is more than ordinarily bold and apparently rides around the city on a bicycle, thus being able to make a quick getaway when followed.

WIDOW AND SON ARRESTED

the guilty persons especially because of the fact that the mother and son have moved five different times in the last three weeks and at no time did they tell their old landlord where they were going.

Following his arrest yesterday the boy told the police about taking the various articles and confided to them that his mother also forced him to take a number of bicycles, and in some instances went with him to sell them. At the time of his arrest yesterday noon, the boy had just returned to the lodging house on North Nevada avenue where he and his mother lived, and was riding a freshly-painted bicycle. He admitted that the wheel was stolen and that he had just finished painting it. When asked where he did the work, he said he had purchased the paint and brush at a store and then rode to a vacant lot where he disguised the bicycle. The police will not give out the name of the proprietor of the lodging house nor the address as they believe he was unaware of the business being carried on by his two roomers.

No attempt was made last night to secure a confession from the woman, who when arrested, appeared to be very much surprised. She was taken into custody at 7 o'clock last night by Detective Gavin while Detective Rallsback was engaging her in a telephone conversation. This little strategy was necessary according to the police, because she had become alarmed at the absence of her son, and had telephoned to her lodging house saying she would not be back at night, because she had to sit up with a sick [illegible].

From the conversation of the woman when arrested, the police are of the opinion that she may be wanted in other cities and a thorough investigation will be made of her past life.

So varied is the assortment of articles found in the woman's possession that it would be almost impossible to enumerate them. For that reason persons who have been robbed in the last few weeks are asked to call at police headquarters.

In one grip the police found several pieces of chinaware underclothing, dresses, aprons, kettles and other [illegible] utensils. Another article found was a valuable fur muff, which, according to the boy, was taken from the Catholic church. He [illegible] to say to whom it belonged. Besides these articles the officers say they found 22 pounds of [illegible] chickens, roast beef, a leg of mutton and some wine, all of which, it is believed have been taken from ice boxes [illegible]. They have learned the police [illegible] that the stuff came from at least 12 different homes in the city, and they expect to find that a greater number than this are represented in the collection.

When the first reports of the ice box and clothesline robberies began coming in, it was believed to be the work of a gang of boys. After a few days of investigation, however, Chief Armstrong and the officers working with him decided that this theory was wrong. The result of the investigations ending in the arrest of the widow and son [illegible] night, [illegible] a complete surprise to most of the outsiders watching the case.

ther indictments be found against Klein or Wo[illegible] for any of the crimes to which they have confessed. The grand jury declares that it is convinced that Charles Stewart and William Brand can unravel the entire net work of criminal [illegible], and are in position to disclose names of all parties guilty.

Leniency Recommended

It is recommended that the court be as lenient as possible in passing sentence on those who confess.

A paragraph of the presentment added at the last moment [illegible] that former Councilman [illegible] refused the tender of $5,000, which was then set apart as a defense fund in case any members of the clique got in the grasp of the law.

Upon receipt of the presentment Judge Cohen ordered the district attorney immediately to draw the indictments against the men who were named and the others named in the presentment.

The grand jury was then excused until Monday.

The only comment the district attorney would make on the result of the grand jury investigation was "we expect pleas at any moment, and we may have to use 'rain checks' because of the rush."

Today's findings of the grand jury put a new phase on the case of Max [illegible] Leslie, who is now in Hot Springs. Leslie was acquitted on the charge of perjury recently in connection with the Columbia National bank matter. He was denied to a grand jury that he had ever received any money in the deal and convinced a jury when placed on trial that on the day he was alleged to have received the money he was in New York.

The present grand jury finds that he paid $17,500 to [illegible] and that the bank paid Leslie $18,000 in June, 1906, but does not specify the date.

Leslie therefore is in this position: One jury has declared it believes him when he says he did not get the money on June 6, 1906, and another jury declares he did receive it in the month of June.

It is declared that the evidence before the present grand jury shows a mistake was made in the first instance as to the date and the transaction will be the basis of a new attack when Leslie is again brought to trial.

NO CREDIT

"You can't get a [illegible] suit until you [illegible] up for the [illegible]," said the [illegible] tail [illegible].

"On my word," exclaimed [illegible] in amazement.

"No, not on your word or your wife [illegible]."

RULES COMMITTEE ELECTED BY HOUSE

RESOLUTION ADOPTED WITHOUT DEBATE.

Senate Refuses to Fix Day for Vote on the Administration Railroad Bill.

WASHINGTON, March 25.—The new committee on rules of the House, as provided for by the Norris resolution, was unanimously elected today without debate. The members selected by Republican and Democratic caucuses were named in a resolution brought in by Mr. Currier of New Hampshire. They are:

Dalzell (Pennsylvania), Walter I. Smith (Iowa), Boutell (Illinois), Lawrence (Massachusetts), Fassett (New York), Smith (California), Republicans; and Clark (Missouri), Underwood (Alabama), Dixon (Indiana) and Fitzgerald (New York), Democrats.

The Senate amendment to the corporation tax law, providing that reports required under the terms of that act shall only be made public when called for by resolution of the Senate or House or upon the order of the President will not be accepted by the House until after full discussion.

"The corporation tax was enacted into law without the House having an opportunity to discuss it," said Mr. Fitzgerald in the House today when a request was made for the appointment of conferees on the legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill which contains the proposed amendment to the law.

"Now that it has gone into effect and objections have been made to it all over the country, it is proposed to amend the law without consideration here."

Under Mr. Fitzgerald's objection conferees on the bill were not appointed, which will give an opportunity for discussion in the House of the Senate amendments.

General debate on the naval appropriation bill began in the House. Mr. Bartholdt of Missouri spoke in favor of arbitration and urged the adoption of a naval program to include only one battleship annually.

Senate Proceedings.

The Senate again refused to accede to Senator Elkins' request that a day be fixed for a vote on the administration railroad bill. A suggestion was made that a month or more might be required for debate.

Senator Bailey stated he had received assurance that there would be no effort to prevent a vote on the bill granting statehood to New Mexico and Arizona. Mr. Bailey has given several public intimations that he would not consent to a vote on the railroad bill until satisfied that a vote would be allowed on the other measures which he champions.

Amendments to the statehood bill were reported to the Senate today from the committee on territories by Chairman Beveridge. They provide, among other things that the elections for the ratification of the constitutions of the proposed new states shall be held not earlier than 60 days nor later than 90 days after the adjournment of the constitutional committees.

Senators Warren and Heyburn clashed in the Senate today over an effort on the part of the former to obtain the passage of a bill authorizing the sale of surplus waters under irrigation reclamation projects.

The Idaho senator objected to the enactment of such a law as contrary to the constitution and the laws of his state. Mr. Heyburn took the floor with the avowed purpose of talking on the bill until some other measure should naturally come up under the rules of the Senate. After he had spoken for an hour or more Mr. Warren, who sat near him, made a remark sotto voce to the effect that the Idaho senator's speech was mere drivel.

The remark aroused Mr. Heyburn's resentment. He declared he would not tolerate such a statement even though not publicly made. He found in it an indication of a desire to dictate his course.

Senator Borah favored the bill and debated much with his colleague, while the bill was under consideration.

Guggenheim Introduces Bill

Senator Guggenheim introduced a bill granting certain public lands in Larimer county to the State Agricultural college for forestry and other purposes. The lands are [illegible] the state board of agriculture [illegible] Colorado subject to [illegible] of the [illegible] of agriculture. The bill provides further that there shall be reserved to the United States all [illegible] use of the land for extracting the same.

Representative Martin presented [illegible] petitions in favor of Senator Cummins' bill [illegible] companies under the interstate commerce laws and 3 petitions against the establishment of the parcels post. All the petitions were signed by business men and firms in the second congressional district of Colorado.

Representative Taylor has introduced a bill granting 640 acres of public land to the town of Fruita, Colo., for public park purposes.

BILIBID PRISON IS LARGEST IN WORLD

ITS EVIL REPUTE IS A THING OF THE PAST.

Place of Horrors Under Spanish Rule in Manila Completely Transformed by Americans.

By Frederic J. Haskin.

Bilibid prison in Manila is the largest prison in the world. It has held this position of supremacy for many years. Twelve years ago when the red and yellow flag of Spain came down from its gates, it was also the worst prison on earth—a veritable survival of the horrors of the Middle Ages. Today it stands with unquestioned right at the head of the list of well-kept, humane, sanitary and correctional penal institutions of the civilized world.

Every afternoon at 5 o'clock in Bilibid prison is enacted a drama which should cause every American heart to leap with pride. Here, where the Americans found a foul and pestilential pit of hell, stands the model prison. Visitors are admitted a few minutes before the hour to witness the daily retreat. They are escorted by guards to a high tower in the center of the prison inclosure. From this tower radiate, like the spokes of a wheel, the several cell houses. Each is open to the air—Manila is tropical, of course and between the cell houses are wide park spaces. Every prisoner sleeps with the same ventilation that is given to patients in modern tubercular hospitals. But there is not a prisoner in sight, save perhaps an occasional "trusty" acting as a servant.

The great clock bell strikes the hour. Then comes marching into the wide open space at the foot of the tower the prison band of a half hundred pieces. The daily band concert begins. Then from the workshops and dayme portions of the prison come the prisoners. Those who have good records and are graded "first class" march with the liberty and the discipline of free soldiers. The "second class" are more closely guarded and must march in closer formation. The "third class," or dangerous men, are under close espionage. The "first class" includes more than half of all the prisoners.

They all take their places in military precision in the spaces between the cell houses, standing at attention. Then booms the gun and as with but a single movement every one of these 4,000 prisoners lifts his hand and makes the salute to the flag. At the same moment the band strikes up the "Star Spangled Banner" and Old Glory begins its slow descent from the flag staff. The smartest crack regiment in all the army could not do it better.

Houses Thousands of Convicts.

There are now about 4,500 convicts under sentence to the national prison, and some 1,400 serving terms in the provincial jails. But not all who are sentenced to Bilibid go there. Camp Avery and Iwahig penal colony get about 1,100 of them. At the beginning of the fiscal year 1908 there were over 3,500 prisoners incarcerated in Bilibid. During the year there were received over 2,500 new prisoners, and 580 old ones transferred from other stations. More than 1,600 were released by the expiration of sentence, and 1,500 were transferred to other stations. There were 22 executions during the year and 113 deaths from natural causes. The incoming and outgoing prisoners per day averaged 18.

The Bilibid prison of other days was a virtual house of pestilence and torment. It was established so many generations ago by the Spaniards that the oldest inhabitant at the beginning of the American regime in the orient could not tell the date. There were racks, pillories, stocks, whipping posts and other diabolical means of punishment. There was no serious effort to make the surroundings of the prisoners even passably decent. When the Americans took control of the prison they had to wade through slime and filth ankle deep. Keepers had been in the habit of relieving the ennui of their jobs by torturing prisoners for the mere fun of it. In one case an aged prisoner was bound hand and foot and lowered head foremost into a well, so that the guards could amuse themselves watching his helpless struggles to keep from drowning. Over 300 prisoners were in perpetual chains. Their wrists and ankles were chained together and some were kept in that stooping position so long that the muscles of their back atrophied and they were unable to straighten up when liberated from their chains. Beri-beri was a common disease, and a welcome death carried away an average of five a day.

Reformed by Americans.

When the Americans took charge things were quickly changed. Eleven hundred political prisoners were liberated outright, the chains were loosened from 300, the buildings were cleaned up, the grounds graded, humane guards installed, and a general overhauling given the whole prison system. The first warden was Major Bean of the army. He was succeeded by George N. Wolfe of Oregon, who still holds the position, and has been responsible for the excellent condition of affairs that obtains there.

All of the prisoners' clothing is manufactured in the prison shops—shoes and hats included. The first effort at industrial enterprise in the prison was the making of soldiers' cots in lots of 10,000. After this bamboo furniture was made for sale. Then a laundry was established, and it has grown until today it is a model American steam laundry plant with a capacity of 7,500 prison pieces a day with room for as much more outside work. It can successfully launder the soiled linen of a battleship in two days, doing as high as 13,000 pieces for a single ship in the harbor.

In its industrial department care is taken that the products do not come in competition with outside free labor products of the same nature. In the fiscal year 1908 the profits of this department amounted to more than 50,000 pesos. Adding to this the 64,000 pesos paid to the government for prison labor, the result is a well-nigh self-supporting prison population. According to the prevailing system of bookkeeping, however, the receipts of the industrial department are not available for the upkeep of the prison, but are turned into the general treasury.

The whole prison system of the Philippine islands is now being conducted along reformatory lines. The prisoners are taught to read and write English and are given a trade suited to their tastes and ability. It has been found that three years of training in Bilibid usually converts a criminal into a useful, decent, law-abiding citizen. When a prisoner has served his sentence he is among the best trained of the natives of the islands, and the management finds it comparatively easy to get him a good job. It is very seldom that the employer has occasion to regret the employment of one whom the prison authorities recommend. Practically every trade followed on the islands is taught at Bilibid.

Penal Colony Maintained.

There is a system of merit in force and the ones who distinguish themselves for good conduct are sent to the Iwahig Penal colony, where they may live in the open and have their families with them. It so happens, however, that most of the men who are sent to this colony are doomed to disappointment in the matter of reuniting with their families, for a Bilibid sentence for a husband is considered by the wife as entitling her to a divorce, so she usually becomes the wife of some other native before her prison husband can establish a reputation for good behavior sufficient to entitle him to go to Iwahig. However, many families have been reunited there.

This colony is governed so that the only restraint is that of moral suasion. Of course the superintendent has power to send any member back to Bilibid, and no firearms are allowed in the colony. There are no guards but the working force is well organized, with the most trustworthy in charge. When the men come to the colony they gain in weight in spite of the hard farm and forest work they are required to do.

There have been several attempts at jail delivery at Bilibid since the American occupation. In one of these a gatling gun was used to quiet the mob. It was shortly after the inauguration of the industrial system. The prisoners had been supplied with bolos for use in making cots and they felt well enough armed to make an attempt for liberty. After 50 rounds were fired from the gatling gun there were 19 dead and many wounded. After that all that was needed was a surgeon and an undertaker.

There are comparatively few white men in Bilibid and most of them are serving short sentences for petty thieving, vagrancy, embezzlement and other crimes that usually follow hard drinking and fast living. The Spaniards who are there have in most cases been sent down for dueling. Less than a hundred women are to be found in the prison.

In proportion to population the Philippines show a comparatively small percentage of criminals. The United States has 87,000 prisoners in its prisons, while the Philippines have less than 8,000 all told. If the ratio that obtains in this country were applied in our oriental possessions it would give a total of nearly 9,000 prisoners in the Philippines. There are approximately a half-million convicts in the prisons of Europe, where the proportion is even higher than in the United States.

The order, the health and the perfect discipline of Bilibid are the result of 12 years of American rule in a half-savage tropical country where even the little children can remember horrible atrocities of tyrannical government which have been forgotten in Europe for centuries and which were never known in the United States. Instead of a place of punitive torture, as it was, Bilibid is now a place where prisoners are helped as much as possible, where they are trained to take useful trade, where they are taught the primary laws of sanitation, and where they are brought under the influence of order and discipline as men, not brutes. Bilibid prison is still the largest prison on earth, but it has changed from being the worst to the best.

Antitrust Agitation Regarded in Germany as Bad Policy, Says Daniel Guggenheim.

NEW YORK, March 25.—Europe looks upon the American agitation against the trusts as bad business policy, according to Daniel Guggenheim, president of the American Smelting and Refining company, who with his brother Isaac returned today on the Lusitania after a six weeks trip abroad.

Mr. Guggenheim said that the antitrust suits pending in the supreme court here have weakened the market for American securities abroad and that Europe fears to invest in anything but gilt-edge securities pending the decisions in the Standard Oil and tobacco trust cases.

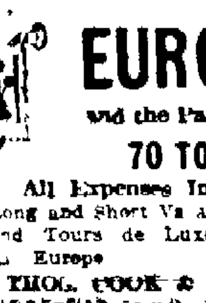

German merchants are talking bearish on copper," Mr. Guggenheim said. "The reason for this is that they are trying to obtain all their copper from America at the very lowest prices. The demand is very strong abroad owing to the poor business conditions which exist in England.

Business men of Germany look upon the American agitation against combinations of capital with curiosity. They are reversing our methods. The government is doing everything in its power to encourage all forms of combinations so that the highest possible prices can be obtained for German products.

"I find on my trip that the agitation and many legal proceedings before the supreme court have had a decided effect upon the mind of Europe. Financiers are looking aghast. This policy they believe is proving a detriment to the progress of our nation and they look upon it as bad business policy."

Chief of Police Armstrong has received orders from the mayor and the fire and police board to "put the lid on and see to it that every saloon is closed." CHANCELLOR DAY'S LATEST.

CHANCELLOR DAY of Syracuse University has almost dropped out of sight since the passing of the Roosevelt administration removed the cause of his frequent outbreaks from power. It will be remembered that the gentleman who presides over Mr. John D. Archbold's institution of learning does not like Theodore Roosevelt and wants everybody to know it. The last two or three years of the Roosevelt administration were enlivened by the publication of frequent speeches, interviews and other verbal explosions wherein the good Dr. Day applied to the President such pleasing epithets as "arch-anarchist," "enemy to prosperity," "destroyer of wealth," etc., whereby Dr. Day got his picture in the papers, which was what he wanted, and his university also got a good deal of advertising of rather doubtful value.

Throughout most of the year since Mr. Roosevelt left the White House Chancellor Day has kept the peace fairly well, but it is plain that he can no more be permanently restrained from going into eruption than one of Mr. Archbold's oil gushers can be prevented from blowing itself up. The other evening he delivered an address in which he denounced President Taft for telling Congress "what kind of laws he wishes passed, and what, indeed, he will permit to be passed. "Perhaps Chancellor Day has never heard of the Constitutional provision which requires that the President "shall from time to time give to Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. The Constitution also gives the President veto power over legislation, so it would be very strange if he did not take an active interest in the doings of the national lawmaking body.

A QUESTION OF VIEWPOINT.

The trouble with Chancellor Day is that long years of service as the head of a university which owes its existence, or at least its present prosperity, to Standard Oil money has given him the corporation viewpoint to such an extent that he cannot look at public affairs from any other angle. His ravings against Roosevelt were based on the fact—which to him was all-important—that Roosevelt had started the war on corporation wrongdoing which was making trouble for the Standard Oil patron of Syracuse University. And when Roosevelt took advantage of the opportunity given him by the publication of the Archbold letters to Senator Foraker to put that worthy statesman out of public life, Chancellor Day was almost as speechless with wrath as it would be possible for so loquacious a person to become. True, the letters referred to certificates of deposit, "herein enclosed," which showed that Mr. Foraker while still a United States senator, was in the pay of the Standard Oil Company, but to the corporation mind of Dr. Day that fact signified nothing at all reprehensible.

Of course the animus of the attack on President Taft is the progressive legislation recommended to Congress in the last annual message. Again Dr. Day feels that the sacred corporation cause is being unjustly attacked—hence his conclusion that the President has no business telling Congress what sort of laws he wishes passed.

What with this legislative program and the recent decision of the Federal Court ordering the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company, it is not surprising that Dr. Day takes a pessimistic view, but if he could only bring himself to look at the brighter side the situation is not so bad. Mr. Archbold would still have a paltry thirty or forty millions left even if the Standard Oil Company went out of business today, and so long as he retains his fortune he surely will not fail to reward such a faithful servitor as Day.

TELEPHONE COURTESY.

DISCOURTESY in the use of the telephone is so common that the following article from a recent number of The Telephone Engineer is well worth reading:

Would you rush into an office or up to the door of a residence and blurt out 'Hello! Hello! Who am I talking to?' and then, when you received a reply, follow up your mild, discourteous salutation with, 'I don't want you; get out of my way. I want to talk with Mr Jones. Would you?' That is not only a sample of the impolite and impatient conversation that is the telephone transmits every times a day.

This is a most agreeable mode of beginning a telephone conversation which many people are now using because it saves useless words and is, at the same time, courteous and direct. It runs thus: The telephone bell rings, and the person answering it says: 'Morton & Company, Mr Wood speaking.' The person calling then says: 'Mr. Wood, of Collins & Sons, wishes to talk with Mr. White.' Then Mr White picks up the receiver, he knows that Mr Wood is at the other end of the line, and without delay and unflustified 'Hellos,' he greets him with the refreshingly courteous salutation: 'Good morning Mr Wood.' That saves one of the genial handshake that Mr Wood would have received had he called in person upon Mr White.

Undoubtedly there would be a far higher degree of telephone courtesy particularly in the way of reasonable consideration for the operators, if the face to face idea were more generally held in mind. The fact that a line of wire and two shining instruments separate you from the person with whom you are talking, takes none of the sting out of unkind words.

Telephone courtesy means answering the telephone as quickly as possible when the bell rings—not keeping the caller waiting until one gets good and ready to answer. Telephone courtesy, on party lines, means being polite when someone else unintentionally breaks in—not snapping, 'Get off the line. I'm using it.'

In a word it is obviously true that that which is the correct thing to do in a face-to-face conversation is also correct in a telephone conversation, and anyone has but to apply the rules of courtesy, prescribed long years before the telephone was first thought of, to know the proper manners for telephone usage.

Be forbearing, considerate and courteous. Do over the telephone as you would do face to face.

Another point which the writer of this article might well have commented on is the inexplicable hurry in which most people suddenly find themselves when using a telephone. The telephone is a great time saver, for by its use a message can be delivered in a minute which might require several hours for transmission by other means, yet the average individual seems anxious to shorten even this minute. Perhaps this haste is the real reason for most of the discourtesy which forms the text of the above article. At any rate, it would be well if telephone users would remember the advice here given.

AUTOS IN THE CANON.

To the Editor of The Gazette:

Will you kindly allow me space in your valuable paper to ask the board of park commissioners if there is any reason why autos should not be allowed to drive up North Cheyenne canon a certain distance far enough to reach grounds suitable for picnics, for instance. North Canon is about the only place near by where conditions, such as water trees and shrubbery are plentiful and the distance from where autos are obliged to stop to good picnic grounds is too great for the ordinary lady to walk. Horses are no longer afraid of autos and no hesitation need be felt on that score. I believe this favor would be appreciated.

From the Bluffs (Ill.) Times.

Another social event recorded in the history of Morgan was pulled off at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Riley Taylor Tuesday evening, when about forty young people from Chapin and vicinity gathered at their home and surprised Mr. Taylor. It so happened that he was washing his feet when the crowd opened the door and rushed in on him it so surprised him that he failed to finish the job.

THE PASSING OF AUTOCRACY.

From the Providence Journal.

The simple fact is that opposition to Mr. Cannon and what he represents is easier than it used to be. The overwhelming sentiment of the country is making itself felt in the halls of Congress and we shall hear more of insurgents and near-insurgents as time goes on. Mr. Foster of Vermont has lately ranged himself among the opponents of the speaker, and other New Englanders in the House may be expected to follow his example before long. Whether they assign their opposition to a mere difference of opinion regarding technicalities or to a general dissent from what the speaker represents in American politics makes little difference. The main point is that the days of the old congressional autocracy are rapidly approaching their close.

UNCLE JOE GOING.

From the New York Globe.

Whatever the outcome of the latest House row up at Washington it is sufficiently obvious that Uncle Joe must go. It is fairly demonstrated that he has so lost the confidence of thirty or forty members of his party in the House that harmony with him in the leadership is impossible. It may be that he is right in saying that the Republican insurgents are the worst unreasonable bunch that ever infested a legislative body. This does not alter the fact that over him his party is split and is likely to remain split as long as he continues to hold to his authority.

The interest of the party is broader than the interest of one man. Keep up the Cannon and anti-Cannon racket during the remainder of the session and then during the fall campaign have the "regulars" try to beat every "insurgent" at the polls and every "insurgent" try to beat every "regular" and there is small chance of the next House being Republican. It may be bitter, but Uncle Joe has had some responsibility for the mixing of the dose that he must swallow.

GERMANY AN ARMED CAMP.

From the New York Evening Post.

The reason why Germany must always remain an armed camp while the other peoples are developing into nations and democracies is always the same. The army made Germany, the army alone can preserve the empire, and in the last resort power must be vested not in the hands of the people, but of the commander-in-chief of the German army. It is astonishing how German patriotism belittles itself in its most fervent moments. Other nations feel that their existence is conditioned and justified by a large number of factors by their population, their natural resources, their accumulated wealth, their habits of industry, their services to civilization, their science, their art, their literature, and of course their military resources. But Germany has confidence in only one of these things, the last. Her sixty million intelligent, laborious home-loving people, her extraordinary proficiency in the useful arts and sciences, her enormous commercial prosperity, her pre-eminent rank in the cultural sphere—these things which make and bind a nation Germany's rulers prefer to regard as utterly negligible. Her only safety is the army, and to that army all things must be sacrificed. Let but a finger on that army and your sixty million Germans are sure to be submerged by the forty millions of French men or by Russia's invincible Manchurian regiments.

Where is the sad and wintry sage we've represented dotting age, in days of long ago? We see him pictured in the books, in old arm chairs or inglenooks and swaying to and fro. His crowning crow with age was seared, he always wore a four foot beard, his dome of thought was bald, he looked as though he'd been on earth since this old planet had its birth, bent, tired and hairless, gaited.

SMART OLD AGE

The old man of this present day is chipper as a colt in May, and limber as a cat; he doesn't let his whiskers grow until they're dragging in the snow, he wears a bobby hat, he shows the world a jovial front, he never tries a Druid stunt—it would not work in truth; he does not sit beside the fire, and fill the air with moaning dire for his departed youth. The old man of this modern day may be gray and bald or gray, but when his friends are found he bravely lifts his dauntless head like any tireless thoroughbred, and snorts and paws the ground. And when it's time to say good by, he doesn't take six months to die, or bore his weeping friends, he says: 'My friends, I've played my hand with all the skill at my command and here the session ends.' This fine old man we must admire, who passes up the glowing fire, the inglenook and chair; whose heart is ever young and brave until he pranced to the grave with both feet in the air.

The Daily Chit-Chat

For of all sad words of tongue or pen
The saddest are these: It might have been."

And also about the most foolish.

The man who never does a thing in imagination until it's time to do it actually, and who once having done a thing, never undoes it in imagination, is the man who gets the most out of his energies.

For the most part I'm not very superstitious, but I believe in one kinds of "hants," and I think it is a very dangerous one, and that is "vain regrets."

Nothing on earth saps any one's energy more than regrets.

Suppose you are going somewhere and have the choice between one route and another, and you choose one and then find that you would have done better to take the other. The loss of time, of course, is unfortunate, but why, by reckoning just how much time you would have gained the other way and just how much you could have done in the lost time, and saying, "If I had only gone the other way," should you tear down your brain tissue with fretting and add to the loss of time a loss of energy?

If I had telephoned to the office before I started to town yesterday I could have gone directly to the place where I was to be sent, met the man whom the editor wished me to see and finished my work by noon.

As it was, it took me an hour longer than necessary to get to the place. I missed the man, had to wait two hours for him to return, and didn't finish my work until late in the afternoon.

As I sat there waiting my mind started in to play itself with "It might have been," and "If you only had had sense enough to call up," and other accusations along that line, and I began to think what I might be doing if only—

And then I stopped and said, "I've wasted enough energy by making this mistake. I won't waste any more by regretting it."

And I shunted that regretful train of thought clean off the track and immediately started another one in its place so that it shouldn't be able to get back in the marvelous way unruly trains of thought so often do.

I know a woman who, after having made any important purchase, almost always goes the rounds of all the shops she has not yet visited in order to see if by any chance she could have done better.

Imagine inviting and coaxing regrets into your mind in that absolutely inane way.

Most of us are besieged with enough of them without going out to hunt for them like that.

"How is he able to accomplish so tremendously much?" I asked in regard to a big political man the other day.

His secretary looked thoughtful. "I think," he said slowly, "it's because when a thing is done he puts it absolutely and utterly aside."

That meant mistakes as well as everything else. Mistakes "It might have beens," "If I only hads" are bitter things, of course, but he who wastes himself in regretting an irrevocable mistake is merely making it twice.

GUN RELOADS ITSELF.

Improvements in Weapons Lead to Removal of the "Kick."

From the Technical World.

Ever since men began to kill each other, which was very soon after selfish interests began to clash a good share of their leisure time has been devoted to the elevating pursuit of inventing instruments for that killing. From the time when the early prowler in the primeval forest discovered that, by tying to the end of a stick the stone destined to crack the skull of his enemy, he could make the crack more surely deadly, his inventive genius, sign as it is of his high rank among the creatures, has been busy over the problem. How to strike, with fatal effect, upon his foe and with safety to himself, has been his study, and he has given birth to many an idea tending more and more from age to age to enable him to do this work by mechanical contrivance.

It is curious that crudities still appear in the weapons which the geniuses of centuries have labored to perfect and that our eye should be opened at this late day to almost ludicrous imperfections in our most cherished killing machine, the rifle.

Yet it is only a few years since the smoke of black powder was done away with and young Mr. Maxim produced his sound-choking, flame-suppressing device. And now comes news from Sweden that an inventor there has found means, at last, to stop the kick which has made sore shoulders from the time the first blunderbuss was discharged and has constructed a weapon that will drop men so fast that a single marksman may dispose of a regiment in an hour.

Eleven hundred and twenty-five shots to the hour from a gun that is carried in the hand and fired from the shoulder, and kickless, it is convenient to handle but little trouble to operate. Swedish Mr. Sjorgren has made a distinct subtraction from the demerits of the rifle from the standpoint of the user, for his new gun has made this record and has the new feature. And the weapon has already taken rank with the most approved and will doubtless become a part of the armament of the world's armies.

HAWAIIAN AMERICANS.

From the Washington Herald.

"The Hawaiian people are proud of their American citizenship," Col. Sam Parker of Honolulu said to a Washington reporter. Colonel Parker, who was the last prime minister of the kingdom of Hawaii under Queen Liliuokalani, is a full blooded native of those islands, and is over six feet tall, and, notwithstanding his great age, is as strong and alert as a man many years his junior.

"We are not afraid of the Japanese in Hawaii—there is no reason why we should be," he continued. "They are good and law-abiding inhabitants, thrifty and progressive. The islands could hardly get along without them. The sugar planters could not produce their crops, and that would spell ruin for our country. It is true the Japanese are all ablebodied men and could give a good account of themselves in a fight. But they have been with us many years before we were annexed to the United States and helped us along in every way.

"Hawaii is just as much a part of the United States as California or New York or any other part of the Union. If the Japs should ever be foolish enough to attack Hawaii they would be attacking the whole United States, and they have too much good sense to do that. Besides, Uncle Sam is putting Honolulu and other places in a fine condition. Strong fortifications are being put up, and it would indeed be foolhardy for any nation to try conclusions with the United States anywhere.

"The Japanese have their peculiarities, like any other people. They are great consumers of rice, and there is lots of rice grown in Hawaii. The Japanese however would not under any circumstances purchase their rice in Hawaii. They claim it is not good, they claim that the Chinese who are the principal rice planters, do not know their business. The Japanese prefer to pay a higher price for the product of their native country, plus the tariff.

Speaking of President Taft's administration, the old Hawaiian statesman said that the President had made himself very popular with the people of the islands by appointing three judges whose candidature had been indorsed by the bar association of Hawaii, and carried therefore the indorsement of the people.

DEVELOPMENT IN ALASKA.

Reports Published by the Geological Survey.

The development of Alaska by railway construction and by the opening of the coal fields is of great importance both to Alaskans and to residents of the western states.

The geological survey issues every year several reports on Alaska, among them a volume containing a summary of the conditions of mining in Alaska and articles on subjects or regions of special interest. One of these volumes, Bulletin 284, issued in 1906, contains a discussion of possible railway routes in Alaska, together with a map showing the distribution of the mineral deposits and the practicable railway routes by which they may be reached.

Character and Importance of Alaskan Coal.

Bulletin 345 contains a report discussing the possible markets for Alaskan coal, stating that the high grade of the coal and its coking qualities make it a very valuable asset in the industrial advancement of the Pacific coast. The composition of Alaskan coals is given and the possibility that they may have to compete with California petroleum is considered.

Accounts of Coal Fields.

The bulletin contains also brief reports on the Bering river, Matanuska, and Herendeen Bay coal fields. This bulletin (No. 284), which is entitled "Report on progress of investigations of mineral resources of Alaska in 1906," by Alfred H. Brooks and others, can be had on application to the director of the survey. The survey's additions of the corresponding bulletins for 1906 and 1907 (bulletins 314 and 345) are exhausted, and only a few copies of the report for 1908 (bulletin 379) are available for distribution.

Best Economic Map of Alaska.

Bulletin 345 contains the most complete economic map of Alaska of the gold placers, the gold and silver lode mines and prospects, the copper mines and prospects, the tin deposits, the coal-bearing rocks, and the areas that contain workable coal beds.

AT 74 OWES FINE HEAD OF HAIR TO CUTICURA

Itching, Scaling Scalp Humor was Making It All Fall Out—Two Doctors Could Not Stop the Trouble—Niece Advised Using Cuticura.

CURED HER SCALP AND MADE HAIR GROW AGAIN

"My mother used to have a very bad humor on her head which the doctors called an eczema, and for it I had two different doctors. Her head was very sore and her hair nearly all fell out in spite of what they both did. One day her niece came in to see her and they were speaking of how her hair was falling out and the doctors did it no good. She says, 'Aunt, why don't you try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment?' Mother did and they helped her, so she soon began bathing with the Cuticura Soap and anointing with the Cuticura Ointment, and in six months' time the itching, burning and scaling of her head was over and her hair began growing. To-day she feels very much in debt to Cuticura Soap and Ointment for the fine head of hair she has for an old lady seventy-four years old.

"In regard to my own case, mine was an eczema something like hers. It was in my feet. As soon as the cold weather came my feet would itch and burn and then they would crack open and bleed. Then I thought I would flee to my mother's friends, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I did for four or five winters and now my feet are as smooth as any one's. Ellsworth Dunham, Hiram, Me., Sept. 30, 1909."

What Barnum Said of Cuticura.

P. T. Barnum, the famous circus man, once wrote: "I have had the Cuticura Remedies among the contents of my medicine chest with my shows for the last three seasons, and I can cheerfully certify that they were very effective in every case which called for their use."

Quarter-Century Campaign Against Tuberculosis

A Review of What Has Been Done in the Twenty-Five Years Since Dr. Trudeau Began His Work in the Adirondacks.

By PHIL P. JACOBS,

Assistant Secretary of the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis

A reception and dinner tendered to Dr. Edward L. Trudeau, the founder of the Adirondack Cottage Sanitarium and the originator of the American crusade against tuberculosis, last month, marked the end of the twenty-fifth year of this life-saving work.

The gathering, which was largely attended by Dr Trudeau's 'graduates,' was held at the sanitarium Among the many gifts presented to Dr Trudeau one of the most unique was a large autograph volume containing expressions of appreciations and congratulations from hundreds of ex-patients.

The addresses made at the reception recall the struggles of Dr Trudeau, and present one of the strangest chapters of history that has ever been written a history full of discouragements and failures yet abundantly crowned with success and above all, a history that tells of life brought within reach of millions.

Thirty-seven years ago Dr Trudeau contracted tuberculosis of the lungs the rod-like germs The guinea-pigs which he used for experimental purposes had to be kept in a hole in the ground to keep them from freezing

In order to determine if environment had any effect upon the tuberculosis germ Dr Trudeau inoculated a large number of rabbits with his pure culture. Several of those little animals he turned loose on an island in St. Regis lake and others he locked up in a dark cellar, and in various unsanitary places All of the rabbits left in unhealthful surroundings died of tuberculosis within three months while all of those allowed to run wild, recovered

Recalling this classic experiment Dr Trudeau says The results of this research increased my confidence in the influence of a favorable environment on the course of the disease and confirmed my faith in the value of the sanitarium and open-air method of treating tuberculosis of which I was then making a practical application.

Hardly had the value and usefulness of this rude homemade laboratory been demonstrated when one night, while Dr Trudeau was sick in New York, the lamp of his improvised box-oven exploded and burned up his laboratory, his house and everything he owned It was here that another leader in the war against tuberculosis showed his faith in Dr. Trudeau. "I am sorry to hear of your misfortune, but take my word for it, there is nothing like a fire to make a man do the Phoenix trick" The next day, through the generosity of George C Cooper, Mrs A A Anderson, and others, funds were supplied for the erection of a fireproof laboratory, which has become a world-renowned institute of research in tuberculosis

A Fresh Start.

In 1885, amid the scoffing of most of his friends, Dr. Trudeau showed his faith in the open-air movement by starting the Adirondack Cottage Sanitarium for persons who had tuberculosis, but who could not afford to pay more than $5 a week for their treatment Dr Trudeau recognized then what has been so clearly demonstrated today that tuberculosis is a poor man's disease and that most of the victims of this malady cannot afford to pay full price for their cure

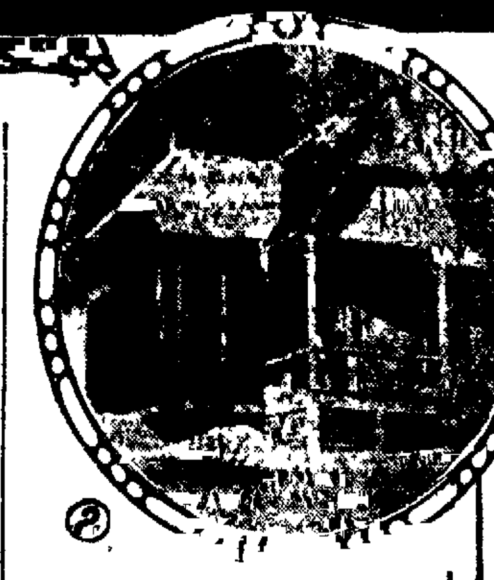

Anson Phelps Stokes gave the first contribution of $500 to the new sanitarium, and Francisco Bianchia gave the second $500 The nucleus of the sanitarium was a little red cottage heated by a wood stove and lighted by an oil lamp, in which Dr Trudeau himself had taken the cure Although the institution had a capacity for only nine patients, it was with the greatest difficulty that the beds could be filled Physicians and laymen alike looked upon a winter in the open air with the zero temperature of the Adirondacks as little short of suicide It was only through the constant work of Dr Alfred L Loomis of New York, the founder of the Loomis Sanatorium at Liberty N Y that enough patients were finally persuaded to go to Saranac Lake to fill the little institution and it is largely through the winning personality and encouragement of Dr Trudeau that most of them were persuaded to stay after they arrived

Here was the actual beginning of the campaign against tuberculosis in America From this little one-roomed cottage have emanated the fires that have kindled a nation and have aroused millions to action What a contrast the 25 years present! Less than a dozen patients were treated by Dr Trudeau that first year, in 1909 over 117,000 tuberculosis patients received treatment and assistance from various sources. Only one institution in 1885, and in 1910 we have 386 sanatoria and hospitals, 265 dispensaries and 394 associations, all devoted to the treatment study and prevention of tuberculosis.

The crusade against tuberculosis started with an investment of a few thousands dollars Today the Adirondack Cottage Sanitorium is worth more than a million and over $25,000,000 is invested in the property of other institutions and organizations doing tuberculosis work. The first year of treatment at Dr Trudeau's original institution cost less than $10,000 Last year over $8,000,000 was spent in anti-tuberculosis work, and governmental appropriations alone for 1910 aggregate $3,000,000, which with private expenditures will bring the total silver jubilee tuberculosis fund to be spent this year up to nearly $15,000,000 just after entering upon what promised to be a brilliant career in medicine Most of his colleagues and friends gave him up for lost, but regardless of their warnings he resolved to spend the summer and winter in the Adirondack mountains living in the open air On the site where Paul Smith's hotel now stands in the heart of virgin wilderness 42 miles from a railroad and 100 miles from any center of culture he lived for years Into this remote spot there penetrated in 1882 an account of Koch's discovery of the germ of tuberculosis Before this hope had been dead, but now a wave of possibilities surged through Dr. Trudeau's mind and he saw with the imagination of all pioneers what the future, with the identity of the foe at last determined might hold in store It was this clear-sighted vision of the future that started the campaign against tuberculosis in America

Making a Beginning

The obstacles which Dr Trudeau had to contend with were well nigh insurmountable and would have discouraged almost any other man When in 1883 he began his technical researches, following up the discoveries of Dr Koch in Berlin, he says "I had from the first many difficulties to contend with, no health no scientific training, no apparatus, no access to books and was situated 42 miles from a railroad in a primitive forest" In a few short visits which he was able to make to New York he studied the elements of bacteriology The rest of that highly specialized science in which he has become an expert and an authority he taught himself His laboratory was a small room in his house, and for the purpose of cultivating the tubercle bacillus in a pure culture he had to arrange a series of boxes, one inside of the other heated with a kerosene lamp and regulated by an improvised thermostat In this oven, however, he succeeded finally in producing the lit-

Thousands Cured Every Year.

Twenty-five years ago hardly a consumptive was cured of his disease and the death-rate was increasing in every civilized country Today thousands of sanatorium "graduates" go out as cured every year and it is a well-known fact that 75 per cent of the incipient cases of tuberculosis can be cured if they are given a chance. When Dr Trudeau started his work, he was almost alone among those who seriously advocated that tuberculosis could be restricted and prevented "Tuberculosis is preventable" is today a by-word in millions of American homes

No words can express the contrast better than Dr Trudeau's own, when he welcomed the International Congress on Tuberculosis in Washington a year ago "For 35 years," said he, "I have lived in the midst of a perpetual epidemic struggling with tuberculosis both within the walls and no one can appreciate better than I do the great meaning of such a meeting I have lived through many of the long, dark years of ignorance, hopelessness and apathy, when tuberculosis levied its pitiless toll on human life unheeded and unhindered when as Jacoud has tersely put it 'The treatment of tuberculosis was but a meditation on death' But I have lived also to see the dawn of the new knowledge to see the fall of the death rate of tuberculosis to see hundreds who have been rescued to see whole communities growing up of men and women whose lives have been saved and who are engaged in saving the lives of others I have lived to see the spread of the new light from nation to nation until it has encircled the globe and finds expression today in the gathering of the International Congress of Tuberculosis with all that it means to science, philanthropy and the brotherhood of man"

A SQUARE-DEAL

Is assured you when you buy Dr Pierce's family medicines—for all the ingredients entering into them are printed on the bottle-wrappers and these are attested under oath as being complete and correct. You know just what you are paying for and that the ingredients are gathered from Nature's laboratory, being selected from the most valuable native medicinal roots found growing in our American forests and while potent to cure are perfectly harmless—even to the most delicate women and children.

Not a drop of alcohol enters into their composition. A much better agent is used both for extracting and preserving the medicinal principles in them, viz.—pure triple-refined glycerine. This agent possesses intrinsic medicinal properties of its own, being a most valuable antiseptic and antiferment, nutritive and soothing demulcent.

Glycerine plays an important part in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in the cure of indigestion, dyspepsia and weak stomach, attended by sour risings, heart-burn, foul breath, coated tongue, poor appetite, gnawing feeling in stomach, biliousness and kindred derangements of the stomach, liver and bowels.

Besides curing all the above distressing ailments, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a specific for all diseases of the mucous membranes, as catarrh, whether of the nasal passages or of the stomach, bowels or other organs. Even in its ulcerative stages it will yield to this sovereign remedy if its use be persevered in In Chronic Catarrh of the Nasal passages, it is well, while taking the "Golden Medical Discovery" for the necessary constitutional treatment, to cleanse the passages freely two or three times a day with Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. This thorough course of treatment generally cures even the worst cases.

In coughs and hoarseness caused by bronchial, throat and lung affections, except consumption, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is a most efficient remedy, especially in those obstinate, hang-on-coughs caused by irritation and congestion of the bronchial mucous membranes The "Discovery" is not so good for acute coughs arising from sudden colds, nor must it be expected to cure consumption in its advanced stages—no medicine will do that—but for all the obstinate, chronic coughs, which, if neglected, or badly treated, lead up to consumption, it is the best medicine that can be taken.

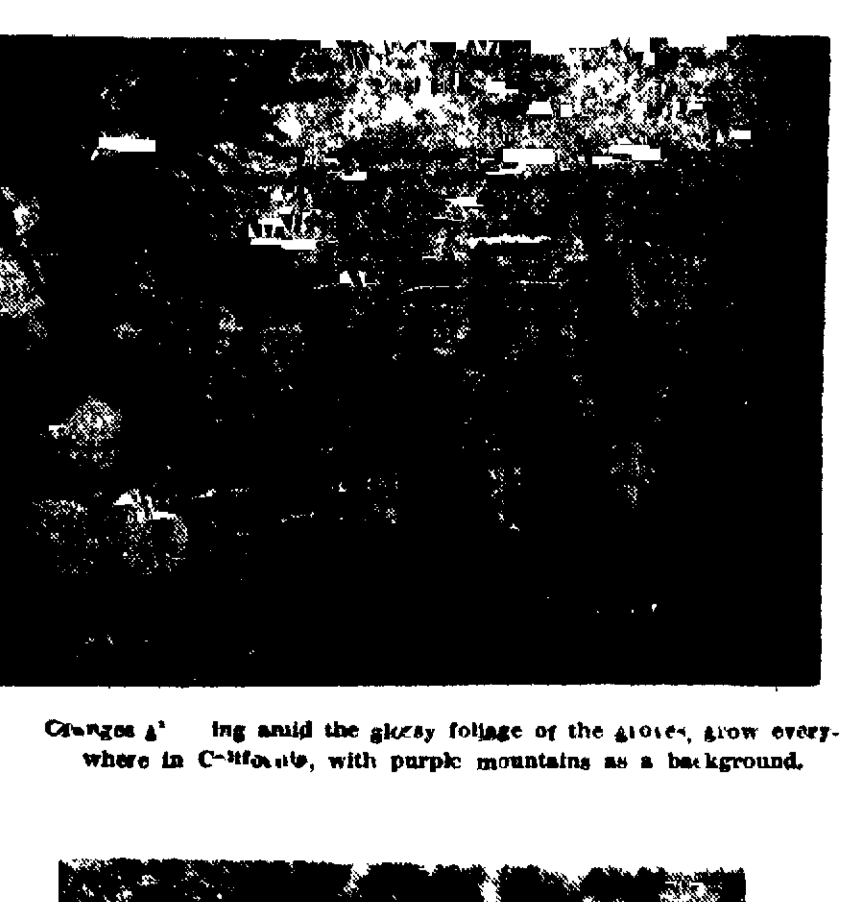

To find out more about the above mentioned diseases and all about the body in health and ... get the Common Sense Medical Adviser—the People's Schoolmaster in Medicine—revised and up to date book of 1000 pages—which treats of diseased conditions and the practical successful treatment thereof. Cloth-bound sent post-paid on receipt of 31 cents in one-cent stamps to pay cost of mailing only. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE LITTLE GATE

I.

THE Star was bored. She sent for Nussbaum and told him so flatly. He placed his bulk on the edge of a chair opposite her, the private car swaying on its way, and thought that in spite of her rose-pink morning gown and freshly massaged face he had never seen her look so nearly middle-aged. Well, come to think of it, she was "getting on." He knew just how long she had been on the stage, seventeen- eighteen?—no, by Jove, more than twenty years, and "no chicken" even then.

Well, what could he do for her? She looked with distaste on the diamonds on his lumpish fingers, turned her eyes to the hard, snow brilliance touching the windows with flashes that seemed to dart from quicksilver, and told him resentfully that she was bored—bored to death. She could not endure the feeling; it was awful.

Nussbaum had some suggestions. Would he have in two of the company and himself and start a "pully" game of bridge at 5 cents a point, "a real sizzler?" She was sick of bridge. How about poker? She did not want him to mention cards again. Well, suppose she let him make her one of his own special "pick-me-ups?" Oh, the mass of men had about as much soul as so many Yahoos; he would be suggesting something to eat next; she really believed he would be quite capable even of that. Nussbaum had been trembling on the verge of describing a particularly fascinating canape of truffles, but he was mentally agile enough to look pained at her accusation. He leaned toward her, dripping sympathy. What was the matter?

Nothing—and everything. Life was the matter—life—life! She had nothing to live for, nothing real. She was a cheat; all the people walking the earth were cheats. The real I was hidden in every mortal's heart, the I that suffered, that wrung its hands, that did not sleep at dead of night. She crushed one arm against her mouth just as she did in the scene with Armand's father. Nussbaum looked frightened. He had never seen her quite as bad as this. Hysterics were due any moment, and she was famous for her hysterics. But when she looked at him again her dark, dry eyes had the burn of old pain in them. It was no use, she could not keep up the game. She was sick, sick, sick of it all.

He began to feel more comfortable. She just wanted "taffy." He had only to brace her up by telling her she was "the greatest ever." They all found this "a medicine easy to take." So he smiled, showing his small, flashing teeth. How could she talk so?—she, Fabia Leighton—the Leighton—the greatest English-speaking emotional actress who had crossed the Atlantic. She was beautiful, she was famous, she was rich, she was young. Could mortal woman want more?

She moved to the edge of the chair and gripped its sides with the dark, bony hands that could be so wonderfully expressive in her big moments. He had pictured her as the public saw her—but what was she really? A woman who had worked against tormenting odds to rise; who now had fame and money, but who still, like one obsessed by the fear of losing an inch of her foothold, spent her life on railroads, pursuing more fame, more money; who had no family left from the wreck of years; no friends of the tender, fireside sort; no real home. She said nothing of the twenty-odd stage years, of the lines that no massage would take out, nor of the little pouch deepening under her celebrated chin, but Nussbaum thought he understood women.

She walked down the car pulling the pins out of her hair. She shook her head and it cloaked her shoulders. It was beautiful hair, a better shade this year than last. Nussbaum thought she had been wise to give up trying for the red tints and was sticking to her own brown. The loosening of her hair seemed to give her relief. Her face calmed, she turned back to him with closed eyes. It was with closed eyes that she made her disquieting statement: She was homesick for England; she would go as far west and north in the states as the contract called for; she would not go into Canada to more snow and ice, she could not. He must cut it out.

Nussbaum bounded up like a ball. It would mean the loss of thousands and thousands; she was sorry, but she could not help it. It would mean being sued; she gave the celebrated, undulating shrug of her thin shoulders and told him to say she was ill—as she was, ill of heart and soul. What about the company? Would she leave them unemployed? No, she would settle with them out of her own pocket, and she added that he could go now; she wanted to be alone. Her last half-hysterical statement followed him as he tumbled out, sputtering—Nothing would induce her to go to Canada—nothing.

Nussbaum remained in the icy air on the platform. He must by some strategy get her over the border. Once there she would fill the Canadian dates. He pondered, he had two things to build upon—her kind heart and her colossal vanity. His meditations resulted in a telegram sent that night to Henderson, owner and manager of the Hyperion opera house in the first Canadian town for which they were booked.

"Leighton fretful, refuses filling Canadian dates. Is determined. May indnce her if arrange something urgent. Say committee wealthiest citizens, several towns, meet her at station. Brass band, flowers, take all if necessary. Ring in whole gallery—sold to orphan asylum. Say little hearts broken if don't see her Juliet. Lay on thick citizens high position, little orphans' tear-drenched pillows, wire fully my expense."

II

It was this telegram that made Henderson finish his coffee hurriedly the next night, plunge into his mink ulster and start off to find Andrew Brett. He had been busy all day arranging the game as Nussbaum had directed, but Andrew was his trump card.

"There's a gentleman," he was thinking. "He'll look the part. The others are hodcarriers compared to him."

With nothing but his nose showing between the high collar and the vizor-like cap, he was soon deep in the furs of his sleigh and speeding through a night of ice and starlight. The rug-draped board hid the driver and was supposed to act as a screen against the wind, but irritating gusts rushed in around angles and sawed his nose. He was carried along the empty, ghostly High street. The theater was dark tonight and the people were housed like hibernating animals. Near an electric lamp one of his posters, that the wind had partially ripped from its place, flapped loudly with the sound of a wet sail, and half hid the passionate, weary face of Fabia Leighton, but Henderson, peeping from the shade of his cap, saw it, and he snorted. Not coming, indeed? Hang such impertinence! She thought Canadians barbarians perhaps, not worth courtesy. Well, she had met her match in Nussbaum. "Nussy" certainly was "a peach" when it came to managing a woman.

The sleigh stopped before a frame house in the suburbs overlooking the river. It was very small and decrepit, with slanting, snow-fringed roof, and sunk in a cup of snow to its first-floor windows. Below it the water was frozen to a crystal plain, where frost-strapped boats threw grotesque shadows, as if huge, chained creatures waited patiently there, the electric lights pulsing on each seeming their sleepless eyes. Handel's "Largo" was being played on an organ within the house and played well. Its heavy majesty was kin to the solemn, cruel, northern night, and Henderson felt this as he rang the bell, although his thought was:

"Gee, that fellow can play!"

The music ceased, there was the sound of leisurely, slippered feet on oilcloth, and the door was opened by a man in a wornout blanket dressing gown of dim green plaid. He was about 50, but with the grace of a lasting boyhood clinging to him. The thin, clean-shaven face was gentle and intelligent; thick gray hair made a shining mat above his brows; he was slight and small and moved with a swinging, graceful lightness in which there was a lingering touch of foppishness. His age was betrayed in the feeble neck above the Byronic collar and in the sunken, lined blue eyes, sad even in the bursts of laughter that came so readily.

He laughed as he drew Henderson in: "What's brought you on such a night? Your man'll need to keep those horses going, I'll tell you. Come on. I'll have something for you in a minute."

He poured a drink for Henderson and raked at the white-hot cylindrical stove till the kettle on it swayed.

"What a night it is, to be sure. Your nose needs attention, Henderson. Pull it, man—rub it—pull it!" He flung down the poker and followed his own directions with a vigor that made Henderson protest. "You couldn't well do without it, you know," he said, his mouth twitching with laughter. "I've seen handsomer ones, Henderson, the real Greek article but this is all you'll get."

"Why do you suppose I've come all the way out here on a night like this, Brett?" Henderson asked sweetly when his nose was a healthy magenta.

"You're so horribly nice to me," said Andrew, "I believe I've come into money."

"No. You're going to do me a favor." Henderson bent over and gripped Andrew's knee. "I'm not one to throw bouquets at myself, you'll admit, so I may just this once ask you if I haven't from time to time been a friend to you?"

"You have from time to time," said Andrew, clasping his delicate musician's fingers restfully, his elbows on the arms of his chair, "saved me from the hospital and the poor house."

"Oh, pshaw! not that much

"Just that. Don't be modest, Henderson. Last winter when the school was closed on account of smallpox and every private pupil I had went to Egypt or some other place, what should I have done but for fiddling it now and again in your orchestra when any show came along? You know and I know. I'm game to oblige you, Henderson. Out with it."

Henderson beamed and took another drink.

"Well, there's a bit of a yarn first. You know Fabia Leighton was booked to come here for tomorrow night in 'Romeo and Juliet.'"

Andrew bent forward. He went suddenly pale, his gentle face took on a ghostly touch of attenuation. "Was booked," he repeated anxiously. "Then she's not coming?"

"Oh, yes, she is, but I'll explain. I got this last night from Nussbaum, her manager."

Henderson flung down the telegraph forms and stared dramatically at Andrew while he read them. The pale face opposite him had two excited eyes and two burning spots under them as he finished. The papers fell and he waited without a word.

"Well, it's all arranged," said Henderson. "I sent a telegram that cost me $14—town clamoring for her. As for the little French orphans—oh, la, la!—little Gretchen wandering up and down the street is a chinestone to the Kohinoor compared to the heartrending picture I drew of their distress."

"There is no orphan asylum nearer than——" Andrew began to remonstrate vaguely.

"But what of the little French hoodlums at 50 cents apiece to stand waving flags in a double line at the depot, singing their funny French version of our national hymn 'Que Dieu Garde le Roi?'" Henderson asked with a grin of derision.

"And the leading citizens—are they——" Andrew's face was serious as he paused.

"Fakes, too." Henderson finished triumphantly. "Why, look here, could we get a leading citizen to do more for Leighton than pay the advanced price for a seat for one night? If he wanted to, his womenfolk wouldn't let him. She's not the sort of woman popular with the Browning clubs and progressive euchre parties—not at all—married too often and too successfully." He began counting on his fingers. "Divorcee twice. Twice a real widow, first of an Austrian count and then of an American millionaire. Women don't like that sort of thing. They're long on the sanctity of home, and that doesn't seem to have kept Leighton awake nights worrying about it. They'll only go to the show hoping to find she's not as handsome as the papers say and see her clothes. Makes me think, by the way," he said, subsiding to a narrative tone; "I heard the full story of her first husband the other day from a man in New York." He shot out his lips. "Poor devil!"

"There always is a first husband in these cases, and always a poor devil," said Andrew, lighting his pipe and bending a drowsy look on the red stove. "A long time, of course?"

"Oh, ancient history—even before she went on the stage it was—and she worked years in the English provinces before she arrived anywhere, you know. His name was David Palmer. They were both very young and as poor as the dickens. They married on nothing, went to live in the country, had a baby. He was aiming to write operas, expected to land a 'Cavalleria' or a 'Carmen.' But he didn't. He'd almost land, miss, and try again. Then the same thing would happen—failure righ along. Well, the kid died, and then Leighton, who saw something she liked whenever she looked in the mirror and knew she could act if she got a chance, got sick of being tied to a man who was slow making good, and chucked him."

"WHEN SHE LIGHTED HIS CIGARETTE."

"Ah," said Andrew, "I see."

"Chucked him like turning over her hand. She went on the stage. He was finished. He went to the deuce and she got a divorce." Henderson grew vehement. "Women like that are not women. Admiration, sables, diamonds, names in the newspapers—that's all they care about. Not a morsel of heart in their makeup."

The pipe hanging from Andrew's lips had gone out.

"How can we tell? How can any one know anything about any one else?" he mused. "Change goes on in each of us, Henderson, not only day by day moment by moment."

"No," Henderson muttered, "you couldn't. I was a fool to imagine you could." He stood up. "It's different with the others scalawags every one of them. They see the joke of playing gentlemen in dress suits that 10 to one they'll steal if I don't watch 'em—but you, a gentleman yourself, Andrew, you couldn't—and I don't blame you. You're right. We'll call it off."

He plunged again into his ulster. Andrew stood with open distress in his face, poisoning his lips nervously.

"Henderson, give it up," he gently implored. "It seems a shabby trick to play."

"I tell you I know that sort," Henderson asserted. "A mixture of money bag and vulture, that's all."

Andrew's eyes were almost closed; he took the dead pipe from his lips. "I wonder," he said, "I'd like to know."

"Know what?"

"If she ever thinks of the man who went to the devil."

Henderson gave a big laugh. "Well, maybe you can find out, son, if you get chummy with her."

"How chummy?"

Henderson put both his hands on Andrew's knee. "That brings me back to the favor you're to do for me. I'm faking the distinguished citizens and you can be the biggest pebble on the beach—our greatest financier and philanthropist—anything you like!"

Andrew let a few seconds pass while he considered this statement, then he stood up, graceful, cold, overwhelmingly calm. He had often been impressive to Henderson—this shabby, sweet-faced man who had come among them from England 15 years before, and who had never explained himself. Whatever his history, good or bad, there was one thing sure, and Henderson felt it now more than ever before; he was more than a gentleman; he was a gentle soul, "the real, true blue article," as Henderson expressed it. He felt ashamed for having suggested his connivance in his trick.

"I couldn't do it, Henderson. I can't explain fully. I'm sorry, but I really couldn't," Andrew said quietly.

"Give it up? I'm not quite crazy. If Leighton got here and found she'd been fooled you couldn't drag her into the theater. I know these spoiled theatrical folks—they think they own the earth. Well, they don't own Tom Henderson, and they'll find it out."

As he picked up his cap, Andrew said:

"Wait." Then he paused as if trying to find words, as if afraid of saying one wrong one, or one too many. "If they are to fool her, I'd rather be the leader and really greet her—really, Henderson. You see," he stammered, as Henderson started at him in delightful silence, "I knew her once. I knew her very well."

"You did? Foxy! Why didn't you say so?" Henderson shouted. "So much the better. Tell her you've become a millionaire here." He seized Andrew's hand and wrung it until he winced. "You'll make it a go, you will."

"I have two conditions, however," Andrew added, his soft eyes lighting; "I wear my own evening clothes, you understand. As it happens, they're the best things I have. And she is never to know that I'm not what I seem to be. You give me your word?"

"Don't you worry about that. That promise is yours. Why, it's fully understood that for the sake of the rest of the Canadian engagement Leighton is never to suspect. The papers are with me to a man—I've settled 'em. The little game will only last about 20 minutes at the station. She won't get here till near dinnertime, and in weather like this we'll have the place to ourselves so that's all right."

Henderson thought it wise to depart on the last self-assured words of the compact, but before the street door closed on him he put his head in again.

"Just one thing. You do need a real nobby coat and cap or she'll tumble sure. Now, they're a little big for you—but will you take mine? You don't mind wearing mine, Andrew?"

"What! This new, lustrous wonder, the show coat of the town?" He smiled indulgently. "All right. I'll borrow your magnificence, Henderson. If I run off with the goods, just remember you tried me beyond my strength."

Left alone, he went dreamily into the sitting room and came again into the hall. He pressed his fingers to his eyes, drew them down his face and took a big breath. He was like a somnambulist awaking in an unfamiliar place. For more than an hour he sat before the stove, his arms folded, gazing at it, although there was nothing to see but the diminishing glow. He went to the organ and began to play, softly at first and brokenly, snatches mixed with reveries, during which his fingers lay useless on the keys. His mood changed and he played volumed harmonies that made the walls of the small room tremble as if the soul of the house were moved. These trickled into the lover's song in "Rigoletto," and he sang it a number of times in a worn tenor, smiling in the pauses.

At 11 o'clock the young engineer who shared the four-roomed house with him came home. He found his supper of chops, turnips and coffee as inviting and hot as usual, but Andrew was not hovering near the table with his pipe and mug of ale, ready for a gossip before bedtime. He was in the kitchen, irons blazing on the stove, while, with excited, even ecstatic flourishes, he pressed his evening clothes and white tie.

By the next day the cold had become almost unbearable, and Henderson was scarcely surprised to receive a telegram from Nussbaum saying Leighton was keeping to her bargain, but wished the reception by the orphans given up, thought it unwise, in fact, that they should come out at all. She also wished a hundred dollars distributed among them.

"She has a good heart, after all—that woman," Henderson reflected as he posted a check to the orphan asylum, 20 miles away. "Children seem to be her weak point."

As the afternoon wore on it began to feel as if the coldest day on record was to be eclipsed. Traffic struck metallic thunder from the frozen town; every pane of glass was opaque and glittering with frost; houses creaked like brittle things about to shatter; a tear on the cheek became a diamond; the breath congealed into a veil of glass on unprotected lips; at noon and during the home-coming evening hours there was movement in the streets, but at other times, except for an occasional figure running as if for life, they were empty white stretches given over to cutting winds.

The eight "distinguished citizens" were at the station, however, in good time, and watched Leighton's private car being side-tracked into the most sheltered spot. But their presence, after all, was needless, for word came that she thanked them heartily, but was too tired to appear before the performance. Henderson caught sight of the blank stare and pallor of Andrew's face when they heard this message as they clustered around the big stove rising like a pillar of flame in the center of the waiting room. Though unpolished, he was a man of great natural intelligence, of an alert, really feminine intuition.

"Well, I didn't spend fifty dollars on these hot gardenias and violets to let them rot. We ought to throw a little side after all our trouble," he fumed, lifting the big pasteboard boxes and shoving them into Andrew's arms. "Here, Brett, you take them to her, and say a few words for the rest of the bunch of great capitalists out here in 24 below zero. Go on, son."

Andrew went down the platform, bewildered, but meeting Leighton's young English secretary came out of the maze and made a diffident request to be allowed to speak a few words to her in behalf of his fellow townsmen.

"She's not asleep," said the secretary. "She says she didn't close her eyes last night. But," with an indulgent confidential smile, "she says that of every night. Wait here, please. What name?"

"Mr. Andrew Brett, the chairman of the committee wishing to greet her," he said, the excited beating of his heart weakening his voice.

The secretary gave an appraising glance at Henderson's mink ulster and cap, and carrying the boxes of flowers retreated within the car. After what seemed a long time, he returned.

"She will see you, for a moment."

Andrew followed him into a place of dusk and warmth. The perfume of heliotrope met him as if from a garden.

"She still uses that scent," he thought, memories difficult to resist rushing over him. He steeled himself. If his heart continued to act in this mountebank manner, how could he find voice to speak to her as a distinguished citizen should?

The place was unlighted, and through the windows, hung with rose silk and arrowed high with frost, the station lights were hazy specks. The noise outside was fused into a murmur as if from a sea. He saw a tall figure in a rosy cloud rise slowly, felt a thin, very hot hand for a second in his own, and the languishing contralto that he remembered said some words of greeting.

He tried to answer, but the voice kept singing in his brain, and the scented, warm air after the benumbing cold seemed to chain his senses. She waited. He was silent. She thought him a provincial person overwhelmed by his personal contact with her, and sank down again wearily.

"I wish I could say I liked your weather," she said amiably, "but I don't. Tell me is it often as cold as this frightful day?"

The electric lights flamed up sharply under the rosy shades, dotting the long, satin-padded car-like hanging tulips. The flash was so vivid, she put up her fingers with an annoyed gesture to shelter her eyes.

"Heavens!" she murmured, half turning from him, "I didn't want " but the secretary had gone.

Their eyes met then. A long, long look of recognition followed, and each saw in it many things that the years had put into graves. He was not the amazed one, and he was the first to move. He moved about with caution, and bent down, his lips trembling.

"Are you glad to see me as glad as I am to see you, Fanny?"

The name seemed to stab her. She gave a little lurch forward, held out one hand to him, but her head hung very low.

"Say it again," she said with yearning.

"Fanny."

"Fanny!" she echoed, and putting her other hand over his, she looked up, laughing in a feeble, foolish way. "Fanny!—oh, David, dear, dear David, what millions of lives I've lived since then!"

She laughed again, her head rolling against the high back of the chair, but he saw she was weeping, too.

"Be careful," he whispered, hearing a sound somewhere. "Everything is news to the papers. We don't want them to make paragraphs about us."

She rose quickly, brushed the tears back, and her eyes flashed under the worn eyelids.

"You're right. If they'd heard you call me 'Fanny!'" she finished with a conclusive wave of the hand, then eyed him longingly. "Bad for you, too, David? Let me look at you." She held him off. "You're one of the big men here. Rich, eh?"

"Yes," he said, "I am a rich man."

"Is the music finished? Of course, you made your fortune some other way. Lumber, I suppose, up here?"

"Lumber," he nodded, adding, "I still play for pleasure."

"You would," she said dreamily, her fingers stroking the shining fur sleeve in an absent way. "Wife, of course very fashionable. Daughters, too, eh? Or is it a son off at school? Have you these things, as well as a fortune and a new name?" A benignant look deepened in her eyes. "Oh, I want to hear that you have everything. I've thought of you a great deal lately—that I might one day meet you—and I dreaded finding you poor, lonely. That would have hurt me terribly."

"I am very fortunate," he said steadily. "I've all the blessings you speak of."

"I'm so glad," she said joyfully, adding with a droll look: "A wife who wouldn't know me, of course—the sort we used to call a Philistine, perhaps. Yes? Ah, old boy, I wasn't criticising," she added quickly. "I've come to believe that the Philistines hold to the real things. We used to sneer at them in our wild days"—she sat down on the arm of a chair and her eyes held a dream as she looked past him—"but, oh, they have the real things—the Philistine women—homes, husbands, babies." She looked down at the toe of a brilliantly spangled slipper. "I never had any baby but Milly."

Her maid came in, and with a change to a light, gracious manner that showed her art, she said:

"You'll take off your heavy coat, Mr.—Mr Brett? Oh, please! I don't often meet such an old and dear friend so you'll dine with me, yes, you will—no refusal! I have a light dinner at 8, only a few moments off, and we'll have time for a good talk."

The wonderful intimate moment came and he sat opposite her once more. They could say what was in their hearts, for she dispensed with the attentions of the maid after the salad was brought on. The small table was radiant with the china and silver which always went with her. The low candle flames made a confidential and hazy nimbus about them, the rest of the car subdued to a pink gloom. The gardenias and violets were strewn on the cloth.

In one old Italian wine of deep amber they drank to many things. To how many hads!—to days of poverty; London days; lean, attic days days of cheap dinners in fusty, Soho nooks. To days in the country, hopeful, ambitious days; cold, fresh mornings in sea-blown lanes; suppers in the long twilights with dish-washing afterward when he washed and she dried. And the peat fires, and his playing at night—rain outside, firelight within. Did he remember? And the mushrooms they used to gather in the meadow back of the house in autumn afternoons when the maples were yellow against a metal-gray sky. And the summer day when he photographed her standing with the baby in her arms among the tall wheat. Did he remember? Yes, he remembered very well.

She seemed to grow younger each moment. The woman with stained, tired eyelids and lines like healed rapier cuts down the cheeks went away, and the girl he had known with a red mouth and eyes that crinkled up in an abandon of laughter till only the lashes showed, came back to him. When she looped up the satin skirt and set out the dessert herself, when she lighted his cigarette and then her own from his, youth and the spirit of dare-devil poverty that counted no sorrow, and love that made wakings to new precarious mornings things of laughter and the cosy shut-in nights a time for the making of dreams, came back and breathed their rapture into his lonely heart.

"Oh, how satisfying it is to be able to say these things to you, David." It was the husband tone of hers that could hold an audience tensely expectant. "I thought of you for a long time one day last spring. For the first time in 15 years I went down to Kent to Milly's grave. I sat there leaning against the stone, just slowly picking the moss from her name. I thought of you, I was unhappy about you. It's an awful thing, isn't it, to be sorry when it's all over, when the pain has all been lived through?"

"But the being sorry is good," he said cheerfully.

It was an enchanting hour, the best in life crowded into 60 minutes. But when the clock struck seven the sadness on which finality is founded, that companions every last time, stole with a reminding chill over both. But a few moments more and, this tete-a-tete ended, they would separate. Almost beyond doubt they would never again stand face to face upon this earth. And yet during these precious moments they were silent for the first time. He stood up to go before she spoke.

"I'll miss you. She rose, too, and gave him both hands. "You're the only one that knows the real I—Fanny, I daren't be myself on the stage any more than on it—no woman can—except perhaps to one other soul, and you're that one to me." She laid her hand with a man's frankness on his shoulder. "I'm a puzzle to myself these last two years, David. I used not to look back—didn't care. I care now. I have ugly moods, a horrid temper, but I go away by myself and cry. Once I didn't mind that you suffered. I do now, and that's why I shall thank God I've seen you so happy and successful. Why do I feel like this?" she asked simply. "Why did I go to Milly's grave? Why am I glad that you've forgiven me? Is it this?" and parting her somber hair he saw a line of white at the roots. "And these?" She dragged her fingers down her cheeks. "Is it just that I'm kinder because I'm not so sure because I'm growing old?"

He wanted to draw her to him to pet her as if she had been a child troubled life's first questions, but he held her hands with dignity, with just the amount of fraternal interest that might be permitted a distinguished citizen.

"I don't think it's that. I've my theory. It's better than yours. You've learned the day's lesson, that's all. We've both learned it. In life, Fanny, we pass under many gates, and toward the close, on the western side of the hill, we come to the last. It's the smallest of all, and our necks must bend low to pass under it. Ah, my dear, that little, little gate!" He saw tears soften the glow of her eyes as she eagerly listened. "It's the Gate of Humility, Fanny, and it leads to a quiet place. Once we rest there and look into the sinking sun, all that we left on the other side of the gate battles and honors and hates and dreams we value rightly. They are nothing. Only this peace counts where we understand all, forgive all."

A handclasp, a long one, and they parted. At the door he looked back. She was standing with one hand resting on the table, gazing after him. Her eyes blessed him.

III.

Andrew rose earlier than was his habit the next morning. The little house was gray with the new day as he set the coffee to steam slowly, put on his furs, and stepped into the street. It was still intensely cold, but the snow that had fallen during the night had taken the Arctic edge from the air. A high ridge rose above this lonely street on the margin of the town, and he climbed it slowly, wrapping his worn, raccoon coat tightly across his chest.

When he gained the top he seemed to have reached an enchanted land. A delicate rose color shimmered over the snow that creaked under his feet like splintered glass; the pine draped trees, with diamond-flecked, metallic lace, transforming them to chimerical castles sparkling one above the other on the heights, the dry snow that every gust sent whirling upward made showers of tinted sparks; over the land of immoderate whiteness the sky was spread, a marquetry of blush-pink and tender green and amethyst; the rising sun was red, the silence was absolute.

Andrew gazed about, thrilled and reverent. He, too, seemed transfigured. A flood of thoughts warmed him, his gentle face shone with a blissful content. He was reviewing his blessings, his right to thankfulness. He had health, music, the thing he loved best, gave him his daily bread; he had a few faithful friends; and he had just forgiven an ancient wrong and buried the phantom of an old hate. Peace was his, marvelous and sweet. His lips moved in prayer, as, standing motionless on the height, he saw the full day burst upon the world, melting every spear of ice flash back rosy lights and blue shadows.

Across the town, that still slept, under an army of snow-coifed chimneys, the sound for which he waited came—a prolonged and sibilant whistle far away, but clear. A long train followed it, crawling into sight and crossing the whiteness with sooty smoke twisting back along its length. From where he watched, it seemed a small, sinuous thing that had belonged to the night, but which must scurry away before the eye could see it. His gaze followed the last car until it had rounded a hill, until the last streak of soot had melted into and become one with the triumphant sun.

EVENING COIFFURE WITH PUFFS.

Curls are at a premium and the curly haired girl is fortunate in that she need not spend hours with her curling irons, as do all the rest of her sisters. The hair is shampooed frequently in hot water sprinkled with soda to produce a light, fluffy effect, and this soft mass of hair is curled and puffed loosely and becomingly. The evening coiffure shown is in the French fashion—with a larger effect at one side. The hair is drawn back loosely without a part, and the ends are rolled into puffs which are pinned high on the head. A black velvet "snood" and a white satin rose complete a very charming arrangement.

BLACK BELLES LEASED TO UNION COMPANY

Ore to Be Opened by Hand Tunnel. Lessees Mining Good Ore in Jack Pot.

Special to The Gazette

CRIPPLE CREEK, March 25.—Important and systematic development of the 1- acres, contained in the Black Belle and Black Belle No. 2, owned by the Black Belle Gold Mining company, located on the southwestern slope of Beacon hill, has been assured by the granting of a five years' lease on this desirable territory to the Union Leasing company, one of the strongest operating corporations of this district.

The Union Leasing company is already operating on the estates of the Gold Dollar and Prince Albert Mining companies in this immediate section and of more importance to the Black Belle company, has driven the Hand tunnel the full length from north to south through the Prince Albert estate and 40 feet beyond the line in to the Black Belles, a total distance of about 1,600 feet. The tunnel will be continued at least another 1,200 feet until the north end of the Black Belles' estate is reached, thereby opening up at depth ground now virgin. That this deep mining will result in the exposure of rich ore bodies would appear certain, when the work on the western slope of the same hill, on the El Paso estate, is taken into consideration.

Two surface shafts have been sunk on the two claims, and the Union Leasing company has instructed Superintendent C. G. Jackson to block out the surface workings, which have produced approximately $250,000 gross bullion value for leasing purposes.

The conditions secured by the Union Leasing company are favorable for lessees, by reason of the low graded scale of royalties obtaining in the original lease, ranging from 15 per cent upwards. The Black Belles lie due east of the El Paso estate and the main water course of Beacon hill to be tapped by the Roosevelt deep drainage tunnel underlies this ground.

Shipments From McKinney.

Smith and Altman, leasing on the Howard shaft on the Mary McKinney, loaded out their regular week-end shipment of two cars today. The ore mined from the big flat under development was classed as of milling grade.

The Western Investment company, operating the main shaft of the Mary McKinney Mining company, is shipping daily and the March tonnage will not fall far short of 850 tons.

Breaking Three Feet of Ore.

The General Leasing company, operating north of the Davenport shaft on the property of the Doctor-Jack Pot Mining company, loaded out a carload of screenings, estimated as of smelting grade. The leasing company is drifting north on the main Jack Pot vein and is breaking better than three feet of ore that goes into the ore bins. John Sharpe is in charge of the leased property as general manager.

Magnet Rock Litigation.

The appointment of a receiver for the Magnet Rock Gold Mining company, sought by James F. Burns of Colorado Springs, upon the allegation that the books of the company are not open for the inspection of stockholders, and officers of the company have removed from the state, has been taken under advisement by District Judge W. S. Morris in the El Paso court. The decision will be handed down in two weeks.

The Monte Cristo mine owned by this company is active under lease to the El Paso Gold Mining company.

Henry Adney Improvement.

The Henry Adney Gold Mining company, operating the Henry Adney mine on Beacon hill, is replacing the blacksmith's forge recently destroyed by fire, with a more pretentious building. The new building will not only contain the necessary blacksmithing appliances, but may rather be classed as the machinery building.

Deeds Not Words,

Colorado Springs People Have Absolute Proof of Deeds at Home.

It's not words, but deeds that prove true merit.

The deeds of Doan's Kidney Pills,

For Colorado Springs kidney sufferers,

Have made their local reputation.

Proof lies in the testimony of Colorado Springs people, who have been cured to stay cured

William L. Imes, retired farmer, 1721 Grant avenue, Colorado Springs, Colo, says: "I endorse Doan's Kidney Pills just as highly today as I did over two years ago, when I gave a public statement in their favor. I suffered from a steady pain over my kidneys and for two weeks I was unable to lie on my side. When I stooped or brought any strain on the muscles of my loins, sharp twinges seized me and made it very difficult for me to straighten. The kidney secretions were unnatural and at times there was a retention, then again the passages were too frequent. Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the D. Y. Butcher Drug Co., removed the pain and lameness in my back and restored my kidneys to their normal condition. Since that time I have had no trouble to speak of from my back or kidneys and I give Doan's Kidney Pills the credit."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, New York, sole agents for the United States.

CONSTABLE HAD THE EVIDENCE

From the Philadelphia Times.

One of Philadelphia's leading corporation lawyers was visiting in New England all of last month, and returning home, he told how he had been arrested there. He had not had a vacation for some years, and getting into the country, he proceeded to be "a boy again."

He struck a piece of country road and ran along for a half mile. He found a fence and vaulted it. He saw a tree and climbed it, and finally returned to the village. Just as he struck the town a hand was laid on his shoulder and a man said in a gruff voice:

"Come with me."

"What for?" inquired the other, in amazement.

"I'm the constable, and you're under arrest. I've been following ye and I think you're crazy."

MEAN THING

"John," queried her husband's wife, "if some bold man were to kidnap me, would you offer a reward?"

"Sure thing," replied the wife's husband. "I always reward those who favor me."

Ice Cream a la Fresno

There is no monotony so monotonous as the monotony of food. We break it frequently with ice cream — but whats to break the monotony of the same old cream flavors, served in rotation over and over?

Griffin's Seedless Raisins

Try it Make a freezer of cream for tonight's dinner, any flavor—chop a cupful of Griffin's Seedless Raisins and add them to the cream Delicious? You don't realize how good ice cream can be till you've eaten ice cream a la Fresno Once you try it one cup of raisins will scarcely suffice Don't make the mistake of using ordinary raisins Griffin's Seedless Raisins have a flavor and richness all their own.

Your grocer has them or can get them for you. Insist on the brand.
